This being the nature of the equitable right created by the assignment, it would follow, in analogy to the rule concerning ordinary liens, that the discharge in bankruptcy did not divest Bridge of his then existing equitable right to Kedon's prospective inheritance. The general rule is well established that an assignment, invalid at law, but good in equity, is valid in equity against the assignor in bankruptcy, whether the thing is assigned absolutely or only as security for a debt. In the latter case, the discharge in bankruptcy terminates the legal personal obligation to pay the debt, and the right granted or assigned is limited to the enforcement of the payment of the money loaned, with interest, out of the property which is the subject of the grant or assignment. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1291; 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law & Prac. p. 963. The assignment is treated in equity as a present contract to convey the future interest, a contract which creates a trust as soon as the interest becomes absolute; and this is a present existing right by contract, which the discharge in bankruptcy does not avoid or terminate. The continued existence of the debt as a personal obligation to pay money is unnecessary to the enforcement of an equitable charge or lien upon specific property. In Fletcher v. Morey, 2 Story, 555, Fed. Cas. No. 4,864, and Parker v. Muggridge, 2 Story, 345, Fed. Cas. No. 10,743, it was held that the Bankruptcy Act of 1841 excepted from its operation specific equitable liens and charges, as well as legal liens, and that an equitable charge could be enforced against the assignee in bankruptcy. This was put upon the ground that "every such agreement for a lien or charge in rem constitutes a trust," which binds the conscience of the assignor. It is said, further, that the act "was by no means intended to affect any of the equitable liens or other equitable claims of parties, arising under their contracts," and that "the property will be followed and affected with the trust in the hands of the assignee [in bankruptcy] in the same manner and to the same extent as it would be in the hands of the bankrupt."

The Bankrupt Act of 1898 expressly exempts from its operation and preserves all liens created by the bankrupt in good faith and for a valuable consideration more than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Section 67, Bankrupt Act; 5 Cyc. 364. The act is in this particular identical with the Bankrupt Act of 1841 (5 Stat. 440, c. 9), and the above decisions apply to it with equal force. It is scarcely necessary to say that, if such an equitable charge in rem can be enforced against the assignor in bankruptcy, it must necessarily be enforceable against the bankrupt himself after his discharge, and especially in cases where the property which is subject to the charge did not get into the possession of the assignee, because at that time it had not been acquired by the bankrupt.

[5] The suggestion that the plaintiff cannot prevail, because equity will not enforce unfair or inequitable contracts, is answered by the fact that, by the refusal to allow the stipulated rate of interest, the court has eliminated the unfair and inequitable elements of the transaction. In doing this it did not make a new contract for the parties. It merely enforced the performance of the contract so far as it was just and fair. An examination of the cases in which the assignments of expectancies have been upheld and enforced discloses that the court has almost invariably deducted exorbitant interest or other unconscionable charges imposed on the necessitous heir at law, and has enforced the charge only to the extent that it was just, fair, and reasonable. The existence of inequitable or unconscionable features does not prevent the enforcement of the grant or assignment so far as it is just and reasonable.

[6] It is claimed that such assignments are not enforced in equity, unless at the time they were executed they were approved or consented to by the ancestor. In suits to set aside such an assignment for fraud or inadequacy of consideration, such consent or want of consent by the ancestor is usually referred to as a material fact bearing upon the fraud or inadequacy; but an examination of the cases shows that this circumstance does not avoid the assignment, but is merely evidence relating to the cause of action, and that, when the assignment is set aside, it is only upon the condition that the real consideration is repaid, with interest.

[7] It is also suggested that an assignment will not be valid, except when it is made to one who already has some interest in the property, or some possibility of an interest, as, for example, a coheir or one of the ancestors. We have found no case in which this doctrine has been announced. On the contrary, a very large number of the cases in which such assignments have been enforced are cases where the assignment was made to an entire stranger both to the family and to the estate.

Our conclusion is that the court below did not err in allowing the enforcement of plaintiff's claim to the extent that it was equitable, fair, and reasonable. It is not claimed that the findings as to what was a fair and reasonable rate of interest under the circumstances are contrary to the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

(163 Cal. 485)

NAVAJO COUNTY BANK v. DOLSON et al.
(L. A. 2,711.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 7, 1912.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 396*)—INDORSERS—LIABILITY—NOTICE OF DISHONOR OR NON-PAYMENT.

Notice of dishonor and nonpayment is essential to the liability of indorsers on a negotiable instrument, in the absence of waiver of such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1022-1028; Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 145*)—NEGOTIABILITY—LAW GOVERNING.

The negotiability of a note is determined by the law of the place where it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 362; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 145*)—EXECUTION—LAW GOVERNING.

Ordinarily the place where a contract is made depends, not upon the place where it is written, signed, or dated, but where it is delivered as consummating the bargain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 728; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

4. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 145*)—NEGOTIABILITY—LAW GOVERNING.

Where a note was mailed in Kentucky to plaintiff bank in Arizona for negotiation, and was accepted at the bank's place of business, and the amount was thereupon advanced to the maker, the note became an Arizona contract, as affecting the question whether it was negotiable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 362; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§§ 155, 164*)—NEGOTIABILITY.

A note was negotiable, as affecting the liability of indorsers, who were not given notice of dishonor and nonpayment, where it recited that it was payable nine months after date, though it contained an agreement by the maker "that after maturity this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and after such extension the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension had been made," though the obligors waived "all homestead and exemption laws and rights thereunder," since Civ. Code Ariz. 1901, § 3308, provides that the negotiable character of an instrument is not affected by waiver of benefit of any law, and since section 3305 provides that the sum payable is a sum certain, though to be paid "with costs of collection or an attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 407-414, 417; Dec. Dig. §§ 155, 164.*]

6. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 146*)—NEGOTIABILITY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Civ. Code Ariz. 1901, § 3305, which provides that a note is for a sum certain as affecting its negotiability, though it is to be paid with costs of collection or an attorney's fee, in case payment is not made at maturity, and section 3308, which provides that the negotiability of an instrument is not affected by waiver of the benefit of any law intended for the obligor's protection, were not affected by the enactment in 1905 of section 3847, which defines a negotiable note as an unconditional promise in writing to pay a certain sum of money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 361; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Navajo County Bank against A. O. Dolson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Parsons and U. T. Clotfelter, for appellant. J. N. O. Rech, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by plaintiff corporation to recover the amount due upon a note executed and delivered by the White Mountain Health Resort, a corporation, against three persons who, before the delivery of the note, signed their names in blank upon the back thereof. No notice of nonpayment or dishonor of said note was ever given to defendants, or either of them; the first notice or demand upon them for payment being the complaint filed herein. The question presented is whether notice to defendants of such nonpayment or dishonor was essential to a recovery against them. The trial court held, upon the facts found by it, that said notice was essential and gave judgment for defendants. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

There is no dispute as to the material facts, which, in addition to the matters already stated, are as follows: Plaintiff is a banking corporation, organized under the laws of Arizona; its place of business being Winslow, Ariz. The note in suit is as follows: "$2000.00. Winslow, Arizona, April 23, 1908. Nine months after date, for value received, waiving grace and protest, I, we or either of us, jointly and severally, promise to pay to the order of the Navajo County Bank of Winslow, Arizona, two thousand dollars with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from date until paid, principal and interest payable in U. S. gold coin, with ten cent additional on amount unpaid if placed in the hands of an attorney for collection. We agree that after maturity this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and after such extension the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension had been made. We hereby expressly waive all homestead and exemption laws and rights thereunder. Interest payable monthly in advance. Payable at the Navajo County Bank, Winslow, Arizona. The White Mountain Health Resort, by Geo. P. Sampson, Pres. Attest: W. C. Kirker, Sec'y."

This note was written at Winslow, Ariz., and there signed by Geo. P. Sampson, the president of the maker, as follows: "The White Mountain Health Resort, by Geo. P. Sampson, Pres." It was then sent to the defendants, at Los Angeles, Cal., and they there indorsed the same by signing their names in blank upon the back. It was then sent by the indorsers by mail from Los Angeles, addressed to W. C. Kirker, the secretary of the corporation maker, at some place in the state of Kentucky. W. C. Kirker there attested the note: "Attest: W. C. Kirker, Sec'y."—and then mailed it, addressed to plaintiff at Winslow, Ariz. It was stipulated that the note was signed by the defendants and all of the parties to it "before it was delivered to the bank." The note, fully signed, was received by plaintiff at Winslow, Ariz., and accepted by it, and plaintiff thereupon paid the consideration therefor to the corporation maker at that place. There was nothing in the evidence to indicate that anything done in reference to the note prior to the time it was received by plaintiff at Winslow, Ariz., fully signed, was done by direction or authority of plaintiff. So far as appears from the record, plaintiff was an absolute stranger to the whole transaction at all times prior to the receipt of the note, fully signed, at Winslow, Ariz., whereupon it there accepted it and made the loan.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] It cannot be doubted that if the note was a negotiable instrument the defendants were mere indorsers, with no other liability than that of indorsers. As such, notice of dishonor or nonpayment would be essential to their liability, in the absence of waiver on their part of the right to such notice—an element not present in this case. This is true whether the case is governed by the law of Arizona (which, as far as applicable, is set forth in the findings of the trial court), or by the law of California, or by the law of Kentucky, as to which there is no evidence, and which, consequently, must be presumed to be the same as the law of California. Both by the law of Arizona and California, one placing his signature upon a negotiable instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor is deemed to be an indorser, unless he indicates by appropriate words his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Rev. Stats. of Ariz., § 3366; Civ. Code Cal. § 3108. And it has been specially provided in both jurisdictions, owing to the divergence of authority as to the character of one indorsing prior to the original delivery of a note or bill (whether indorser, maker, surety, or guarantor), that, where a person, not otherwise a party to an instrument, places thereon his signature in blank before delivery to the payee, he is liable as indorser (Rev. Stats. Arizona, § 3367; Civ. Code Cal. § 3117), in the absence, of course, of words indicating his intention to be bound in some other capacity. There is absolutely nothing in the California law that dispenses with the necessity of notice of nonpayment to such an indorser of a negotiable instrument (see O'Connor v. Clarke, 44 Pac. 482; Fessenden v. Summers, 62 Cal. 484), and we see no force in the claim of appellant that the Arizona law differs from our law in that regard. The subdivisions of the Arizona section relied on by appellant in this regard simply specify in terms the persons in whose favor the indorser's liability runs, and the liability of every indorser without qualification is declared in section 3369, Revised Statutes. He agrees to pay only if the instrument be dishonored and the necessary proceedings on dishonor be taken; and if notice of dishonor is not given him he is discharged. Section 3392, Rev. Stats. Ariz.

[2-4] Whether or not the note involved here was a negotiable instrument must be determined by the law of the place where the contract between the parties was made. 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instr. § 367. Ordinarily the place where a contract is made depends, not upon the place where it is written, signed, or dated, but upon the place where it is delivered as consummating the bargain. Id. § 368. The learned judge of the trial court was of the opinion that this place was Winslow, Ariz., and that the contract was an Arizona contract. He found from the evidence as we have detailed it, that the secretary (Mr. Kirker) mailed the note in Kentucky to plaintiff at Winslow, Ariz., "for negotiation"; that the plaintiff received it at said Winslow, and "accepted said note so indorsed at its banking rooms in said city of Winslow," and then and there advanced the principal sum to the maker. Undoubtedly there are many cases holding substantially that the deposit by one party in the mails of an instrument properly addressed to the other party, with postage thereon prepaid, constitutes a delivery to the other party at the place where and the time when it is so deposited. But clearly this cannot be the case, unless the deposit in the mail was under such circumstances that the carrier can reasonably be considered the agent of the party to whom the instrument is addressed, rather than purely the agent of the other party. We can see no ground for doubting the correctness of the conclusion of the learned trial judge upon the evidence before him that Kirker sent this note from Kentucky to plaintiff at Winslow for negotiation and acceptance at the latter place; that the carrier in transporting the instrument was in no sense the agent of plaintiff; and that there was no contract between plaintiff and any of the other parties until it received and accepted the note at Winslow, Ariz., and consented to make the loan. As we have said, so far as appears, plaintiff was an absolute stranger to the whole transaction up to the time it received the note through the mail. The presumption afforded by the note itself, dated and expressly made payable at Winslow, Ariz., that it was given and accepted in Arizona, was certainly not so overcome by the facts shown by parol evidence as to require a contrary conclusion at the hands of the trial court. There is nothing in Ivey v. Kern City Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 46 Pac. 929, opposed to our conclusion. We are in no way concerned here with the rule there discussed, to the effect that when a letter is deposited in the mail properly addressed to the proposer, unconditionally accepting a proposal theretofore made, the contract is complete. Under the conclusion of the trial court, which is sufficiently supported by the evidence, the deposit in the mail in Kentucky by Secretary Kirker was the deposit of a mere offer or proposition to plaintiff; and the place where the proposition was received, accepted, and acted upon by plaintiff was, to use the language of the opinion in the case last referred to, "the place where the last act is performed which is necessary to render the contract obligatory." Loud v. Collins, 12 Cal. App. 786, 789, 790, 108 Pac. 880, also relied upon by appellant, is easily distinguishable from the case at bar. There was ample evidence in that case to support a conclusion that the deposit of the note in the United States post office at Chicago by Alderson was an acceptance of a proposition theretofore made to him by the payee, which completed the contract.

¹ Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 112 Cal. xvii.

[5, 6] We are satisfied that the note must be held to have been a negotiable instrument under the law of Arizona. Under express provision of the statutes, the negotiable character of an instrument otherwise negotiable is not affected by a provision which waives the benefit of any law intended for the advantage or protection of the obligor (section 3308, Revised Stats.), and the sum payable is a sum certain, within the meaning of the law defining negotiable instruments, although it is to be paid "with costs of collection or an attorney's fee in case payment shall not be made at maturity." Section 3305, Revised Stats. Clearly neither of these provisions can be held to have been affected by the enactment, in the year 1905, of a new section defining a negotiable promissory note as "an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to order or to bearer." Section 3847, Rev. Stats. This was practically but a re-enactment as to promissory notes, in more concise phraseology, of the old section defining negotiable instruments. Section. 3304, Rev. Stats. There is no warrant for holding that it was intended to repeal such other provisions as those defining the term "a sum certain in money," or the provision for waiver of exemption. The only other provision which is claimed to affect the negotiable character of the note is that declaring: "We agree that after maturity this note may be extended from time to time by any one or more of us without the knowledge or consent of any of the others of us, and after such extension the liability of all parties shall remain as if no such extension has been made." The point made by appellant is that this provision makes the time of payment uncertain and unascertainable from anything stated in the face of the note; the statute requiring, as we have seen, that the promise to pay must be "on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time." When it is said that the time of payment must be stated with certainty, the time referred to is that when the holder can insist on payment. Therefore, if the time when the holder has the absolute right to demand payment is prescribed with certainty, the note is negotiable, so far as this objection is concerned. See National Bank, etc., v. Kenny, 98 Tex. 293, 83 S. W. 368; Missouri, etc., Co. v. Long (Okl.) 120 Pac. 291; Cunningham v. McDonald, 98 Tex. 316, 83 S. W. 372; First Nat. Bank v. Buttery, 17 N. D. 326, 116 N. W. 341, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878, 17 Ann. Cas. 52. There is nothing uncertain in this note about the date of maturity. The provision refers only to something that may be done by the maker, if the holder agrees thereto "after maturity." Clearly the provision referred to is in no way binding upon the holder of the note. No one can reasonably claim that the effect thereof is to give the maker the right to extend the time of payment, without the consent of the holder. The note was dated April 23, 1908, and by its terms, unaffected by anything in the provision referred to, was to mature "nine months after date," at which time the holder, so far as anything contained therein is concerned, had the absolute right to insist on payment. There was no provision under which the time so specified could be changed, or the right of the holder to insist on payment at such time be held to be affected. Where the time is thus definitely and irrevocably fixed at which the note shall mature, and the holder shall be at liberty to compel payment, we are unable to see how a provision looking to a possible agreement between the parties, after maturity, for an extension renders the executed note at all indefinite or uncertain as to the time when it is payable. The reasoning of the authorities already cited fully supports our conclusion on this point. Most, if not all, of the cases cited by appellant on this point are distinguishable by reason of the nature of the provision held to render the instrument uncertain and indefinite as to the time of payment.

It is to be noted that there does not appear to be contained in the Arizona law any provision similar to our section 3093 of the Civil Code, declaring that a negotiable instrument must not contain any other contract than such as are specified in the article relating to such instruments.

We are forced to conclude upon the record that the note here involved was a negotiable instrument; that the defendants were mere indorsers thereon; and that they were relieved from liability on account thereof by the failure of plaintiff to give them notice of its dishonor and nonpayment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(163 Cal. 503)

ALDERSON v. CUTTING. (L. A. 2,869.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1912.)

1. DEEDS (§ 173*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—
VIOLATION—RIGHT OF ACTION.

The deed of each of the lots into which a tract is platted being conditioned that a residence shall not be erected on the lot within less than 25 feet of its front line, and this being declared to be for the benefit of the other lots, action for violation thereof on one lot may be brought by the owner of one of the other lots.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 543; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 171*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—
VIOLATION.

The condition in a deed of a lot that a residence shall not be erected less than 25 feet from the front line of the lot is violated by the outer line of the roof extending over a porch to within 22 feet 8 inches of the street, and pillars supporting the outer side of the porch encroaching 5 inches; these being substantial parts of the building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 450, 537-542; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 171*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—
VIOLATION.

Steps leading to the building are not an integral part of it, within the restriction of a deed against erecting a dwelling within 25 feet of the front line of the lot.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 450, 537-542; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 175*)—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—
VIOLATION—WAIVER.

Plaintiff, owning one of the lots into which a tract was platted, the deeds of each of which contained a restriction against building within 25 feet of the street, did not waive her right to complain of defendant's violation thereof on his lot, damaging her property, because not having complained of prior violations on other lots which did not damage her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 545, 548; Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

5. DEEDS (§ 175*)—RESTRICTIONS—WAIVER—
KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

There can be no waiver, in the absence of knowledge of the facts on which the claim of waiver is based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 545, 548; Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

6. STIPULATIONS (§ 14*)—OPERATION—FIND-INGS OF FACT.

A stipulation that certain allegations of the answer are true amounts to an agreed statement of facts as to such issues, as to which findings are not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-37; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

7. INJUNCTION (§ 195*)—TRIAL OF ISSUES—
CONFORMITY TO PLEADING—DAMAGES.

The complaint stating two causes of action, one for injunction, the other for damages, both for violation of a building restriction, the denial of injunction is no reason why the judgment for damages, to which the facts show plaintiff entitled, cannot stand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 415; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by Maude W. Alderson against Freeman J. Cutting. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Harris & Swanwick, for appellant. Smith, Miller & Phelps and William A. Alderson, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment for $300 damages for the violation of a building restriction. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The parties are owners of adjoining lots in block A of West Park tract in the city of Los Angeles. The plaintiff acquired her lot, No. 38, in 1907. Lot 39 was purchased by the defendant in 1909. The tract had been platted by its owners for purposes of sale, and all deeds made by them, including the deeds to plaintiff and defendant of lots 38 and 39, respectively, contained provisions to the effect that no building other than a residence with the customary outbuildings should be placed upon the lot conveyed, and that such residence should be erected not less than 25 feet from the front line of the premises. Each of said deeds declared that the conditions stated should, as to each owner of any other lot in the tract, his heirs, successors, or assigns, operate as covenants running with the land for the benefit of such other lots or their owners. The plaintiff had erected a residence upon her lot before the defendant made his purchase. After purchasing, the defendant commenced the erection of a residence upon lot 39. The plaintiff promptly protested against the erection of the proposed structure, on the ground that the building would be nearer the street line than 25 feet. Notwithstanding the protest, the defendant proceeded with the construction. The court finds that a substantial and integral part of defendant's building extended 2 feet 4 inches within the restricted distance of 25 feet from the street line, and that thereby the defendant violated the restriction, and damaged plaintiff's property in the sum of $300.

[1] The validity of restrictions like those here involved is not open to question. Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 257, 116 Pac. 729. In case of a violation, relief may be sought by the owner of any lot in the tract for the benefit of which the restrictions were imposed.

[2] The evidence supports the finding that the defendant, in erecting his house, exceeded the limits permitted by the terms of his deed. It appears that the defendant's building was a one-story dwelling, the roof extending on the front over a porch. There are five pillars, supporting the roof, at the outer side of the porch. The outer line of the roof is 22 feet 8 inches from the street. The pillars, too, encroach by 5 inches, and their caps slightly more. The purpose of the restriction is to prevent the encroachment of substantial parts of buildings. Ogontz Land, etc., Co. v. Johnson, 168 Pa.

178, 31 Atl. 1008. The projecting roof and pillars occupied such a relation to the building as to warrant the finding that they were substantial parts of the structure. Bagnall v. Davies, 140 Mass. 76, 2 N. E. 786; Rear-don v. Murphy, 163 Mass. 501, 40 N. E. 854.

[3] On the other hand, a provision like the one in question does not prohibit the placing of steps within the restricted space. Kirkpatrick v. Peshine, 24 N. J. Eq. 206; Ogontz Land, etc., Co. v. Johnson, supra; Tripp v. O'Brien, 57 Ill. App. 407. The steps leading to a building are not an integral part of it, within the meaning of the clause under consideration. There is, therefore, no force in appellant's contention that plaintiff cannot maintain this action because she herself had built her house within the 25-foot limit. The evidence shows that the only part of plaintiff's house extending over the line consisted of the front steps and the buttresses supporting the same.

[4, 5] It is further urged that plaintiff's right to complain of the location of defendant's house had been waived by reason of the fact that, before defendant bought his lot, buildings had been put upon various other lots in the tract in violation of the restriction, and no objection on account of such buildings had been made by plaintiff or other lot owners. But there is nothing to show that any of the other violations had caused any damage to plaintiff. Under these circumstances, her failure to object did not affect her right of action for a violation which did damage her property. Payson v. Burnham, 141 Mass. 547, 6 N. E. 708; Bacon v. Sandberg, 179 Mass. 396, 60 N. E. 936; Zipp v. Barker, 40 App. Div. 1, 57 N. Y. S. 569. Furthermore, the court finds, and the finding is sustained by the evidence, that the plaintiff did not know, until the filing of the answer herein, that the restriction had been violated by any person other than the defendant. There can be no waiver, in the absence of knowledge of the facts upon which the claim of waiver is based. Bucklen v. Johnson, 19 Ind. App. 406, 420, 49 N. E. 612, and cases cited; Bennecke v. Insurance Co., 105 U. S. 355, 26 L. Ed. 990.

[6] The claim that the court failed to find upon certain issues raised by the answer may be disposed of by pointing out that there was a written stipulation to the effect that these allegations of the answer were true. To the extent of the issues thus covered, this amounted to an agreed statement of facts. No finding is required with respect to facts which have thus been settled by agreement of the parties. Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 Pac. 364.

[7] The only other point made by the appellant is that the judgment, denying to plaintiff the injunction which she sought, and giving her damages alone, cannot stand. Quoting from appellant's brief, his contention is that "the giving of damages by the court is an alternative remedy, which may be administered in place of the injunction, but that there is no right to damages independent of an injunction." No sufficient reason in support of this claim is suggested, and none occurs to us. The complaint stated two causes of action; one seeking equitable, the other legal, relief. If plaintiff's rights were invaded, as the findings show they were, she is entitled to recover such damages as she sustained, notwithstanding the conclusion of the court that the equitable remedy of injunction should not be granted.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

163 Cal. 507

VANDERBILT v. ALL PERSONS CLAIMING ANY INTEREST IN OR LIEN UPON THE REAL PROPERTY HEREIN DESCRIBED OR ANY PART THEREOF.
(S. F. 5,537.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 13, 1912.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 23*)—PLAINTIFF'S POSSESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

That from the San Francisco earthquake, April 18, 1906, until September 21, 1906, a lot was not occupied by any one, except that a watchman visited the place daily, the ruins of the building, which was practically destroyed, remaining, does not show such lack of actual possession by the owner as to prevent her from suing on the later date to quiet title, under the McEnerney Act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 267*)—RETROACTIVE OPERATION—EVIDENCE—PENDING ACTIONS.

Erroneous admission in evidence of abstracts of title in a suit to quiet title was not cured by subsequent enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1855a (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 64), which authorizes admission of such evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 350-359; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 263*) — RETROACTIVE OPERATION.

Retroaction is never allowed to a statute, unless required by express legislative mandate or unavoidable implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 344, 349; Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

4. QUIETING TITLE (§ 25*) — PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Right to have title to a strip of land quieted is not defeated by another's payment of taxes without claim of title and under a mistaken assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Virginia Vanderbilt against all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the real property herein described. From a judgment for plaintiff, Owens & Unger, a corporation, appealed to the District Court of Appeal, and a rehearing was granted by this court. Reversed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Houghton & Houghton, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin and Geo. A. Clough, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. [1] After decision by the District Court of Appeal a rehearing was granted in this case, in order that we might further examine the two principal questions, which were as follows: (1) Was the evidence of plaintiff's actual possession of the property sufficient? (2) Was the abstract of title offered and accepted in evidence by the trial court properly admissible under the provisions of section 1855a of the Code of Civil Procedure? As we agree with the answer of the District Court of Appeal to the first question, we adopt a part of its opinion upon that subject, as follows:

"This is an action to quiet title, under the so-called McEnerney Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 78), to certain lots in the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant corporation, Owens & Unger, appeals.

"The action concerns several different parcels of real estate, only one of which is involved in this appeal, referred to as parcel 6 in paragraph IV of the complaint, described as follows: 'Commencing at the point of intersection of the northerly line of Pacific street with the westerly line of Front street; thence running northerly along the westerly line of Front street 147 feet 5 inches; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with the northerly line of Pacific street, 137 feet and 6 inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with the westerly line of Front street 147 feet 5 inches to the northerly line of Pacific street; thence easterly along the northerly line of Pacific street 137 feet 6 inches to the point of commencement.'

"Defendant, Owens & Unger, in its answer, claimed 'an easement appurtenant of and for a right of way over and upon a portion of the said real property in said complaint described,' as follows: Then follows the description of a strip of land, 'being the northerly nine (9) feet eleven (11) inches of the real property described in the said complaint herein,' sometimes referred to herein as strip A. In an amended answer said defendant pleaded sections 318, 319, and 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure in bar of the action, alleging that neither the plaintiff nor any of her grantors have paid all or any of the taxes, state, county, and municipal, which have been levied and assessed upon the said strip of land. At the close of the testimony defendant was granted leave to file a second amended answer 'to conform to the proof offered on the trial of this case.' By this amendment defendant pleaded adverse possession of a tract of land 128 feet 7½ inches on Front street by 137 feet 6 inches running north. It is then alleged that 'of the land above described' a strip 12½ inches fronting on Front street, 'taken from the south end of the land hereinbefore described, is a part of the land described in the sixth paragraph or description of land in the complaint herein.' It is next, and lastly, alleged that 'for more than 10 years prior to the commencement of this action, the whole of the 50-vara lot of land situate on Broadway and Front street in the city and county of San Francisco, and described as follows: [137 feet 6 inches along Front street and of like depth]—and the buildings and improvements on said land, have been each and every year of said 10 years, and for each and every year since this action was commenced, assessed to the defendant Owens & Unger, and its grantors,' and by them paid, 'and that at no time within said period has plaintiff paid any of the taxes levied and assessed on said land or any part thereof.'

"Plaintiff, as we have seen, claims a frontage of 147 feet 5 inches on Front street, which thus overlaps the lot claimed by defendant 9 feet 11 inches. The complaint was filed September 21, 1906."

Here follows a catalogue of appellant's specifications of alleged error, and then the opinion thus proceeds:

"1. The first point made in the attack upon the findings and judgment is that proof of actual possession when the action is brought is necessary to the jurisdiction of the court and to the rendering of judgment for plaintiff, and is insufficient; citing Lofstad v. Murasky, 152 Cal. 64, 91 Pac. 1008. In that case the court said: 'In order to constitute such possession, there must be an appropriation of the land by the claimant such as will convey to the community where it is situated visible notice that the land is in his exclusive use and enjoyment; an appropriation, manifested by either inclosing it, or cultivating it, or improving it or adapting it to such uses as it is capable of.' The court also held that there must be such actual possession as is required under the statute 'to maintain title by adverse possession when such title is founded upon a written instrument.' It was also held that this same possession 'must be stated or shown in his affidavit,' and 'upon the hearing before the court for the purpose of obtaining the decree authorized under the act he must prove actual possession of the property at the time of filing his complaint and making his affidavit as it is defined by these authorities.' The averments of actual possession both in the complaint and the affidavit in its support are sufficient.

"It is claimed by plaintiff that James G. Fair, plaintiff's testate, acquired the property in controversy in 1889, and witnesses testified that in 1890 or 1891 Fair built a five-story brick building covering the entire lot now claimed by plaintiff; that the north wall was up to or against the south wall of the building formerly on the lot at the corner of Broadway and Front street, or, if not quite to that wall, that the Fair building extended over the entire 147 feet 5 inches along Front street. Aside from the question of title, and addressing ourselves to the question of actual possession at the commencement of the action, it appears from the evidence that the Fair building was practically destroyed by the earthquake and fire of April 18, 1906, and on September 21st following this action was commenced. Witnesses testified to the then condition of the ruins, and it appeared that the building had a basement some 7 or 8 feet below the level of the pavement on Front street; that the walls of this basement up to the level of the pavement were intact; that at places the wall of the building was standing several feet above the basement. Witness Brock testified that 'the westerly wall was standing to the height of about three stories, perhaps four—the building was formerly a five-story building—and on the north wall there were probably 20 feet of the wall above the street line and foundation'; that in the disaster the walls had fallen into the basement, substantially filling it with brick and debris, and that the brick had also fallen on the pavement of both Front and Pacific streets; in this mass of material in the basement were the remains of machinery which had been used by tenants of the building; that plaintiff's agents had a watchman and caretaker of plaintiff's property, whose duty it was to visit this and other of plaintiff's property daily, and that he did so look after it; that at one point on Pacific street about 20 feet of the pavement had fallen in, and the agents put a fence around that opening to prevent accidents to pedestrians; that plaintiff was not herself, nor was any one for her, in actual physical possession of the property at the commencement of the action.

"In the case of Lofstad v. Murasky, supra, as we understand the facts, the land was open, vacant, unoccupied, and unimproved. There was nothing to show to the community that the land had an owner, or that there was or ever had been possession of the land by any one, except constructive possession, and the affidavit and complaint stated that this was the only possession claimed by plaintiff. We do not think the court intended by its decision to hold that actual physical occupancy by the owner or a tenant must be shown in all these cases, or that evidences of possession or occupancy such as under normal and ordinary conditions are required, and as pointed out in the opinion, must be made to appear in every case. Without undertaking to say to what extent the condition in which the great fire of April 18th left a building which had occupied a lot will be satisfactory evidence of actual possession by the owner, within the meaning of the remedial act, we have no hesitation in holding that, in the present case, in view of the facts shown, and the fact that the action was commenced so soon after the disaster, and so soon after the act went into effect, the requirements of the statute are satisfactorily met."

[2, 3] The trial court permitted the introduction in evidence of certain abstracts made up and certified long after the fire of April 18, 1906, and based partially upon Edwards' Abstracts of Records or Breviate. Under section 1855a of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed at the time of the trial, this ruling was erroneous. Dahler v. All Persons, etc., 124 Pac. 995. It is suggested, however, that, section 1855a of the Code of Civil Procedure having been so amended since the trial that the evidence offered in the case at bar would be now admissible, it would be useless to remand the cause for retrial. We do not doubt that the section in its present form would justify the rulings admitting the abstracts, if the case were tried now, because section 1855a at present provides that "when, in any action, it is desired to prove the contents of any public record or document lost or destroyed by conflagration or other public calamity and after proof of such loss or destruction, there is offered in proof of such contents * * * any abstract of title, or of any instrument affecting title, made, issued and certified as correct by any person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of insuring titles or issuing abstracts of titles, to real estate, whether the same was made, issued or certified before or after such loss or destruction and whether the same was made from the original records or from abstracts and notes, or either, taken from such records in the preparation and upkeeping of its, or his, plant in the ordinary course of its business, the same may, without further proof, be admitted in evidence for the purpose aforesaid." Stats. 1911, Extra Session, p. 64.

But, conceding that now the policy of the law is to admit abstracts in evidence in the court below, does that justify this court in affirming a judgment supported by evidence erroneously admitted at the time of the trial? Section 1855a does not in terms, at least, assume any retroactive effect, and, while it marks a change in legislative policy, it contains no express authority for this court to apply that amended policy to pending appeals. Appellant, relying upon the plain terms of the section as it existed at the time of the trial, may have omitted to put in all of the proofs of its asserted title. For aught we know, it may be in possession of other evidence, which would have been introduced, if the cause had been tried upon the rule which now prevails. A great injustice might be wrought if appellant were denied the opportunity of offering such proofs. When a remedy is sought which is not authorized by law, a subsequent statute giving such remedy does not operate on the existing suit. Wetzler v. Kelly & Co., 83 Ala. 443, 3 South. 747. Retroaction is never allowed to a statute, unless required by express legislative mandate or unavoidable implication. Smith v. Lyon, 44 Conn. 178. In Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 400, 52 Pac. 717, this language appears: "In regard to acts concerning procedure, the question as to their retrospective operation in general has reference to pending cases. No case is cited in which it has been held that such law, in the absence of a declared intent, has rendered valid a proceeding entirely closed before the enactment of the law." We find no authority which would justify us in sustaining the judgment because of the change in the statute after the commission of error in admitting the abstracts of title without warrant in the law then in force.

[4] As the case must be again tried, it is unnecessary to discuss in detail the remaining points raised in the court below. One of these relates to the payment for years by defendant and its predecessors of the taxes upon a strip of land adjacent to its building and claimed by plaintiff. If the new trial shall reveal the fact to be (as the District Court of Appeal found upon the record before it, composed partly of the incompetent evidence) that plaintiff holds the fee to this strip of land and has occupied it by a portion of her building for many years, and that payment of taxes on it was based, not upon any claim of title by Owens & Unger, but upon a mistaken assessment, then such payment would not defeat Mrs. Vanderbilt's right to have her title to this strip of land quieted.

At the trial objection was made by appellant that plaintiff had failed to give notice, as provided in section 1855a, Code of Civil Procedure, of the intention to use certain abstracts at the trial. We need not pass upon the bearing which the failure to give such notice might have upon the rulings of the trial court, as this question may be so easily eliminated from the new trial by compliance on respondent's part with all of the requirements of that section of the Code.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 514

In re COZZA. (S. F. 5,960.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 15, 1912. Rehearing Denied Sept. 13, 1912.)

1. ADOPTION (§ 3*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The right to adopt a child exists only by statute, which may prescribe the conditions under which an adoption may be legally effected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. ADOPTION (§ 7*)—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—CONSENT OF PARENT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, except that consent is not necessary from a father or mother deprived of civil rights or adjudged guilty of adultery or cruelty and for either cause divorced, or who has been judicially deprived of the custody of the child on account of cruelty or neglect, etc., consent of the parent to the adoption of a child is jurisdictional, unless the exceptions specified in the statute exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. ADOPTION (§ 13*)—JURISDICTION OF COURT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The court, in proceedings under Civ. Code, § 224, for the adoption of a child, has no discretion to make an order of adoption merely because it deems that the interest of the child will be promoted thereby, regardless of the consent of the parent or the existence of the prescribed conditions dispensing with consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

4. ADOPTION (§ 20*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—EFFECT OF ADOPTION.

The act of adoption severs the legal relation between parent and child, and destroys their reciprocal relations, and creates new ones between the adopting parent and the child; and the law, recognizing the natural rights of parents, will permit adoption only with the consent of the parents, unless under exceptional conditions prescribed by law, consent is unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 29-32; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. ADOPTION (§ 3*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

A statute authorizing the adoption of a child, and thereby depriving the parent of his natural rights, must be strictly construed; and to warrant the exercise of the power of adoption conferred on the court, and sustain an order of adoption made in opposition to the wishes and against the consent of the natural parent, the existence of the statutory conditions rendering consent unnecessary must be clearly proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. ADOPTION (§ 7*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, except that consent is not necessary from a father or mother deprived of civil rights or adjudged guilty of adultery or cruelty, and for either cause divorced, or who has been judicially deprived of the custody of the child on account of cruelty or neglect, does not dispense with the necessity of consent by a mother who has been divorced from her husband on the ground of her cruelty towards him, but awarded by the decree of divorce the custody of the children of the marriage, and does not interfere with the orders of the court in divorce proceedings as to the custody of children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. ADOPTION (§ 7*)—CONSENT OF PARENT—NECESSITY—"ABANDONMENT."

Evidence held not to justify a finding that a parent has abandoned a minor child, within Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, unless the child has been abandoned. To constitute an "abandonment," there must be an intention to do so, express or implied, from the conduct of the parent respecting the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 4-13; vol. 8, p. 7559.]

8. ADOPTION (§ 15*)—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

The court, on appeal by a mother from an order of adoption made without her consent, will not, on reversing the order, direct the restoration of the child to the mother; but her remedy is by habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adoption, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

In the matter of the adoption of Margaret Cozza. From an order of adoption, Filomena Setaro, formerly Filomena Cozza, the natural mother of the child adopted, appeals. Reversed.

H. A. Blanchard, for appellant. Frank H. Benson, Daisy M. Bowen, and A. M. Free, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order of adoption, taken by Filomena Setaro, formerly Filomena Cozza, the natural mother of the child. The father and mother of the said child were divorced by a decree of the superior court of the state of Washington, entered February 27, 1904, on the ground of extreme cruelty on the part of the wife towards her husband, and by the decree the two children of the marriage, the above Margaret and her sister Mary, were given to their mother; the father being required to pay $10 per month in aid of their support. The decree provided that the children should not be removed from the jurisdiction of the superior court rendering the decree. The mother desired to come to her sister in California and take the two children with her; but the father objected to Margaret going, and an arrangement was made between them by which Margaret should remain in Washington, the father to place her in a convent in Tacoma and pay for her support there and whenever the mother should thereafter desire it she might take the child. Margaret was then about two years of age; her sister Mary, a few years older. Margaret was accordingly placed in the convent, and the mother and Mary came to Santa Clara county, in this state, where, about two years afterwards, the mother married one A. Setaro. Margaret remained under the control of her father in Tacoma for about four years. She had been taken from the convent and placed in the custody of a family in Tacoma, with whom her father lived. Information having been received by the mother and her sister Mary that she was being cruelly treated by her father, Mary was anxious to go to Tacoma and bring Margaret back with her. It does not appear that the stepfather was informed of this intention, and, in fact, while the mother had expressed a willingness that Mary should go, the latter left for that purpose, without notifying her mother that she then intended to do so, and without having obtained the permission of either her mother or stepfather. When Mary reached Tacoma, she went to live with her father, and kept house for him and Margaret for about six months. Observing that the information of ill treatment towards Margaret by her father was true, and learning, further, that he contemplated remarriage, Mary prevailed on him to allow her to take Margaret to her mother in California, to which he consented, though hesitatingly, and advanced the money to defray their expenses.

Immediately that the children came into the household of their mother and stepfather in San Jose, the latter objected to their remaining there at his charge and expense, insisting that their support should be borne by their natural father under the decree of divorce, and was particularly irritated by the circumstance that a portion of the money which had been given by their father to the children when they left Tacoma had been spent for clothing for them, instead of being given to him for their support. There is no doubt but that this attitude of the stepfather toward the children was the occasion of considerable quarreling between himself and his wife, as it is equally clear that she begged and pleaded with him to let them remain. He was, however, obdurate, and shortly thereafter consulted a deputy probation officer of the superior court of Santa Clara county, with the result that a complaint was sworn to by that officer, under the provisions of the "Juvenile Court Law Act," charging the girl Mary with persistent refusal to obey "the reasonable and proper orders and directions of her parents or guardians." Under this petition, which was filed April 29, 1909, not only Mary, but also Margaret, was taken from the custody of the mother by the officer. Mary was temporarily placed by order of the court in the custody of one of its probation officers, and Margaret was given into the charge of Mrs. I. C. Merriman, another of said officers. On May 14, 1909, Mary was by order of court returned to her mother, and on May 18, 1909, four days thereafter—Margaret being still in the custody of Mrs. Merriman—a complaint was filed against her by another of the probation officers of the court, making the same general charge as was made against her sister Mary. No notice of the filing of this last petition was given to the mother. No citation was served upon her, and it does not appear that she was present at any time when the proceedings against Margaret were heard. In fact, the evidence quite clearly shows that neither she nor the stepfather was there. On May 28, 1909, an order of court in the proceeding was made, placing this child in the custody of Mrs. Merriman (in whose custody she then actually was by virtue of the order previously made in the proceedings against Mary) until the further order of the court, and a year afterwards—on May 27, 1910—a similar order was made. From the time that this child was taken from the custody of her mother she remained theoretically in the custody of Mrs. Merriman under the order of the court. Actually, however, she was placed by Mrs. Merriman in the immediate care and custody of the petitioners in this proceeding for adoption, F. A. Marriott and his wife, the latter a daughter of Mrs. Merriman, and the child has resided in their family and been cared for by them ever since.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Soon after the original order taking the children from the custody of the mother, the stepfather repented of his conduct and took Mary back into the family. He then joined with his wife in the effort she was making, and which she has all along made, by herself and others acting in her behalf, to have her child Margaret restored to her. Both she and her husband are Italians, having but a limited and imperfect knowledge of the English language and ignorant of our laws. She was given to understand (whether correctly or incorrectly is of no consequence) that nothing could be done toward securing the restoration of her child until the end of the year, for which period she was informed the court had ordered the child to be retained in the custody of Mrs. Merriman. She stated that she was so advised by attorneys whom she had consulted, and by others. This matter of a year arose from the fact that while the original order in the proceeding against Margaret was in fact, as appears by the record of the juvenile court, that the child be retained by Mrs. Merriman until its further order, it appears from the desk book record of the judge of the superior court in whose department the juvenile court proceeding was had (and so stated by him on the hearing) that the custody was ordered for one year. This accounts for the statement, made by the mother and those aiding her, that in her efforts to have her child restored she was informed that nothing could be done until the year had expired. The mother during all of this time sought an opportunity to see and converse with her child, a privilege which was invariably denied her. It may be said here, and it is not disputed, that both the stepfather and mother of the child are shown to be industrious, honest, and frugal people, possessed of a good home and considerable means, that the mother has endeavored and been anxious and desirous of having her child restored to her, and that she and her husband are willing, competent, and able to take charge of her.

There is no evidence that the child Margaret was ever cruelly treated by her stepfather or her mother while with them, and there is no evidence of any want of maternal affection and love for the child. Failing to secure the return of her child through her own efforts and those of her relatives, and believing that she could not do so until the end of the year, some time after the expiration of that period, and on January 25, 1911, she filed a petition before the superior court, exercising jurisdiction as the juvenile court, and before the judge thereof who made the order respecting the child, asking that the court order the return of said child to her, under its power to set aside, change, or modify an order for such custody at any time during the minority of said child, and asked that a citation be issued by the court and served upon Mrs. Merriman, in whose custody said child still remained. The citation was issued and served; February 10, 1911, being fixed by the court as the time for hearing on this petition. No hearing was then had, however, nor, as far as appears, has been had since, because on the very day set for hearing thereon a petition was filed by Mr. and Mrs. Marriott for an order of court allowing them to adopt said child. This petition alleged that the child was some eight years old, had for more than one year past been under the care and direction of Mrs. I. C. Merriman and in the immediate custody of petitioners, alleged the decree of divorce between the parents of the child in the superior court of the state of Washington on the ground of cruelty on the part of the mother of the child, averred that more than two years prior to the petition the father of the child had deliberately sent her out of his home and away from him, with the intention of permanently ridding himself of her care and custody, and that more than a year before the filing of the petition the mother of the child drove her from her house and home with similar intent and for a similar purpose, that for more than one year last past neither of said parents had made any provision or agreement for the support of said infant, and nothing had been contributed by said parents or by either of them towards her support. It was further alleged that said child had been deserted and abandoned, within the meaning of section 224 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state, and that the district attorney of the county of Santa Clara had consented to her adoption by petitioners.

No citation was issued or notice directed to the mother of the hearing of this application. In fact, the petitioners were proceeding on the theory that she was not entitled to any, even to a hearing on the alleged facts of desertion and abandonment of her child, and that the adoption could be ordered without any notice to her, or without her consent. She appeared, however, and, after objecting to the jurisdiction of the court, answered, denying all the allegations of the petition, saving that respecting the terms of the decree of divorce. After hearing, the superior court made an order for the adoption of said child by petitioners, and this appeal is taken by the natural mother from that order.

In making its order the court found the fact as to the decree of divorce just as alleged in the petition for adoption and admitted in the answer, and held that, as the decree of divorce in the state of Washington was granted on the ground of cruelty towards her husband upon the part of the mother of the child, her consent to its adoption was, under section 224 of the Civil Code, unnecessary; also found that said child had been more than eighteen months before the filing of the petition for adoption deserted by both its parents, and for more than said period had been "left by said parents in the care and custody of one Isabelle C. Merriman, without any agreement or provision for its support, and said minor child being deserted by both of its parents and abandoned by both of its parents within the meaning of section 224 of the Civil Code of the State of California"; that these conditions, within the view of the section cited, rendered the consent of the mother unnecessary, and required only the consent of the district attorney of the county of Santa Clara, which had been given.

The only question necessary for consideration on this appeal affects the construction placed by the superior court on section 224 of the Civil Code and its application under the evidence. That section provides that "a legitimate child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents if living, * * * except that consent is not necessary from a father or mother deprived of civil rights or adjudged guilty of adultery or cruelty and for either cause divorced, * * * or who has been judicially deprived of the custody of the child on account of cruelty or neglect," and except, as further provided, "neither is consent of any parent necessary in case of any abandoned child; * * * any child deserted by both parents or left in the care and custody of another by its parent or parents without any agreement or provision for its support for the period of one year, is deemed to be an abandoned child within the meaning of this section," and "any abandoned child within the meaning of this section, if left in the care and custody of another person for one year or more, may, with the consent of the district attorney of the county where the person applying to adopt such child is a resident, be adopted by such person."

[1] The adoption of a child was a proceeding unknown to the common law. The transfer of the natural right of the parents to their children was against its policy and repugnant to its principles. It had its origin in the civil law, and exists in this state only by virtue of the statute which, as above stated, expressly prescribes the conditions under which adoption may be legally effected.

[2] Consent lies at the foundation of statutes of adoption, and under our law this consent is made absolutely essential to confer jurisdiction on the superior court to make an order of adoption, unless the conditions or exceptions exist specially provided by the statute itself and which render such consent of the parents unnecessary. Unless such consent is given, or, for the exceptional causes expressly enumerated is dispensed with, the court has no jurisdiction in the matter.

While we have set forth the circumstances surrounding the taking of this child from the custody of its mother and its retention by Mrs. Merriman under the order in the juvenile court proceeding, such evidence is to be considered here, as it could only be considered by the superior court in the adoption proceeding, for the purpose of determining whether the child was deserted or abandoned by its parents within the meaning of section 224 of the Civil Code, and hence, by the terms of that section, the consent of the mother was rendered unnecessary. Neither here nor in the superior court could it be considered in the adoption proceeding for any other purpose.

[3] Nor is discretion committed under adoption proceedings to the superior court to make an order therefor, if it deems that the interest of the child will be promoted thereby, regardless of the consent or wishes of the parent, or the existence of the prescribed conditions dispensing with such consent. Investing the court with such authority would be to make it the possible means of forcibly taking a child from its parent and transferring it to another person, against the protest and opposition of the parent, merely because the court deemed it advisable and for the benefit of the child that this should be done. No such power or discretion is contemplated or given by the law governing adoption. In the absence of consent, or of the existence of such conditions as the quoted section prescribes, it is a matter of no consequence in the proceeding for adoption what may be the conduct of parents towards their children, their environment or home surroundings, or the moral or material advantage which the children might receive by being taken from the custody of their parents and placed elsewhere.

If there exists such dereliction of parental duty as necessitates the taking of children out of the custody of their parents, the state as parens patriæ, in aid of the welfare of children, has provided ample means by which it may be accomplished without completely destroying the natural relation existing between the parent and child. This is accomplished through guardianship or other judicial proceedings, and even by virtue of the Juvenile Court Law Act itself, where temporary control of them may be taken, at the same time that there is preserved to the parents the right to have the children restored to them when conditions have changed so that the parents are fit to resume the primary obligation placed on them by nature and the law of caring for and supporting their children.

[4] As the act of adoption is to sever absolutely the legal relation between the parents and child, to destroy their reciprocal relations, and create entirely new ones between the adopting parent and the child, the law, recognizing the natural and sacred rights of natural parents to their children, will permit this to be done only with the consent of the parents, unless under exceptional conditions, which it itself prescribes, such consent is declared unnecessary.

[5] The power of the court in adoption proceedings to deprive a parent of his child being in derogation of his natural right to it, and being a special power conferred by the statute, such statute must be strictly construed, and in order to warrant the exercise of the special power and sustain an order for adoption, made in opposition to the wishes and against the consent of the natural parent, on the ground that conditions prescribed by statute exist which make that consent unnecessary, the existence of such conditions must be clearly proven, and the evidence bring them within the terms and intent of the statute. The law is solicitous towards maintaining the integrity of the natural relation of parent and child, and in adversary proceedings in adoption, where the absolute severance of that relation is sought, without the consent and against the protest of the parent, the inclination of the courts, as the law contemplates it should be, is in favor of maintaining the natural relation. Applying this rule to a consideration of the matter at bar: Here the mother was refusing her consent to the adoption, actively opposing the making of such an order, and asserting her natural and paramount right to her child. Every intendment should have been in favor of the claim of the mother under the evidence, and, if the statute was open to construction and interpretation, it should have been construed in support of the right of the natural parent.

[6] The court found that, notwithstanding her primary right to her child and its custody, she had lost all right to object to being deprived of it under the adoption proceeding, or to insist that this could not be done by order of the court without her consent, by virtue of the decree of divorce, and, further, because she had deserted and abandoned it within the meaning and intent of section 224 of the Civil Code.

We are satisfied, however, that the court improperly construed the section as to the effect on consent of the decree of divorce as the terms of that decree stand, and that the evidence does not sustain the conclusion of the court that either the child had been deserted or had been abandoned by its mother within the meaning of said section 224, or deserted or abandoned at all, so as to preclude the necessity for consent to its adoption.

Discussing these matters separately, and, first, as to the effect of the decree of divorce on consent under the section: The trial court, reading this section literally, held that, as the decree of the superior court in Washington between the parents of the child was granted to the husband for cruelty on the part of the wife, her consent to the adoption of her child was, under the section, unnecessary, ignoring entirely the fact that, notwithstanding the decree was in favor of the husband, the custody of the children was, by the very terms of the decree, awarded absolutely to her—not a limited but an absolute one as far as the custody is concerned.

Appellant here—the mother—contends that this is not the proper construction to be given to the section, and that, if it is to be so construed, it is, as far as it attempts to deprive her of the right to the custody of her children judicially awarded her by the decree of divorce without notice or her consent, unconstitutional, as depriving her of a vested right to her child without due process of law.

There is no necessity for considering this constitutional objection, because we do not think the section is subject to the literal construction which the superior court placed upon it. Such a superficial interpretation is not permissible, when the spirit of our laws and the particular purpose of the enactment of the section respecting consent and the power of courts in divorce proceedings over the custody of the children of the marriage are considered.

In the latter proceeding the court has power and authority to make such orders as it may deem necessary and proper for the custody of the children of the marriage, without being constrained in any respect by the cause for which the divorce is granted, and may at any time vacate or modify such order. While section 224 provides generally that consent shall not be necessary to the adoption of children of the marriage from the parent against whom the decree is granted on the ground of cruelty, the section stops there. It does not assume to interfere with the orders of the court in divorce proceedings as to the custody of children, or, as said in Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal. App. 161, 111 Pac. 405, speaking generally of this section

224: "This section does not undertake, nor is it intended, to modify the other sections of the Code dealing specifically with the right of custody."

What is meant by this section, and what was intended by the Legislature, it having in mind the natural rights of parents, as also the authority of courts in divorce proceedings to award the custody of children to either spouse, was that when a divorce is granted for cruelty (we are only concerned with this ground here), and the custody of the children is awarded absolutely to the innocent party, the consent of the guilty one will not be required in adoption proceedings. It contemplates that by decree of court in such proceedings the court has deprived the guilty spouse of all right to such custody, and awarded it absolutely to the innocent party. That this is the proper interpretation of the section we think reasonably appears from the language used in the section in this same connection as to consent and with reference to other proceedings than in divorce, where it is provided that, when the parent has been "judicially deprived" of the custody of the children on account of cruelty or neglect, the consent of such parent is not necessary. The Legislature, in providing a method for adoption, whereby the legal ties between the parent and the child should be absolutely severed, could not have intended to interfere with the authority of the court in other proceedings involving the custody of the child, or that the decree of a court in a divorce proceeding which awarded such custody to the guilty spouse should be entirely ignored.

There is nothing in the fact that a mother has been guilty of cruelty towards her husband which compels the court, in awarding him a decree on that ground, to also award the custody of the children to him. The weightiest and most natural considerations looking exclusively to the welfare of the children—their tender years, her conceded affection and love for them, the mental and moral and even material advantages which they will derive by being left with her, aside from probably the consent of the husband thereto—make it highly important that the court should so decree; and the Legislature, recognizing this, could not have contemplated in the general language it used to allow interference with the decree of the court in the divorce proceeding respecting such custody, or to have intended that a spouse so under control of the children under a decree of court could, in another proceeding, be deprived of their custody without her consent.

As we have said, the whole proceeding for adoption is based on the consent of the parents thereto. Considering the natural relations to be severed and the new relations to be formally created, in the nature of things consent is necessary, and essentially made so, except as the law dispenses with it, where a decree of divorce is granted on certain specified grounds and the innocent spouse is given absolutely the custody of the children—a judicial determination that he or she, on account of specific matrimonial misconduct, should not have future control or custody of them—or where the children have been deserted or abandoned by their parents, and such unnatural conduct dispenses with such consent.

This is a proper, fair, and just interpretation of the section, and in the case at bar, as the mother was awarded the custody of the children by the decree of court, her consent was absolutely essential to the validity of any order for their adoption, unless, as further found by the court, the children had been deserted by her or abandoned, within the intent and meaning of section 224.

[7] As to these latter findings: Abandonment is principally relied on, though desertion is also found. The only claim of desertion which is made or can be made under the evidence is that the child was permitted to remain in the custody of Mrs. Merriman from the time the court in the juvenile proceeding ordered it into her custody, which is the basis also for the claim of abandonment. Up to the time of this order in the juvenile proceeding, when the child was taken from its mother, there was no desertion or abandonment by either parent in any sense. The father was in possession of the child, supporting it, in Tacoma, until she was brought to her mother in San Jose, who was entitled to her possession under the decree of divorce, and who has never relinquished that right. After one of the quarrels between the mother and the child's stepfather over probably the retention of the children in the family (though the unsworn statement of the child at the hearing was that it was because her mother whipped her), she ran away to a family living in the neighborhood, who were not on friendly terms with the mother, and who sent immediately for an officer. The child remained there about two weeks, so one of the family to whose house she went testified; while, on the other hand, it was testified that she only remained there two days. Why she was permitted to remain away from her mother at all is not disclosed, but it was probably because of the refusal of the stepfather to keep the children in the family or support them, and the inability of the mother to then overcome his objections. However long Margaret may have remained away, her sister Mary called on the family harboring her and took her back to her mother, where she remained until the stepfather, against the pleading and objection of the mother, brought both the children to the juvenile court, and they were taken from the custody of the mother by order of the court in the juvenile proceeding against Mary.

It would be a waste of time to endeavor to point out that this was not desertion of the child by the mother. In fact, as we stated, desertion is not so much relied on as abandonment, within the definition of the statute. This claim is based on the fact that the mother, after the order of the court originally placing the child in the custody of Mrs. Merriman, permitted her to remain there for over a year, without any agreement or provision for her support. That this was no abandonment within the terms of the section is so clearly shown under the evidence that it ought not to be open to discussion, although counsel for respondents contend strongly for it. Abandonment has a well-defined legal meaning. As said in Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 243, 104 Pac. 444, 446: "In order to constitute abandonment, there must be an actual desertion, accompanied with an intention to entirely sever, so far as it is possible to do so, the parental relation, and throw off all obligations growing out of the same." To constitute abandonment, there must be an intention to do so, express or implied, from the conduct of the parent respecting the child. This is the character of abandonment contemplated by the very terms of section 224, as far as they are applicable or are relied on in this proceeding. It contemplates a case where a child has been voluntarily surrendered or left for a year in the care and custody of another, without any agreement or provision for its support.

This is not the situation here. The care and custody of this child was not so left by the mother with either Mrs. Merriman or the petitioners for adoption. It was taken away from her and placed in the custody of the former by order of the juvenile court (whether valid or not is immaterial to this inquiry), without the consent of the mother and against her wishes and desire. It was taken from her under process of court—by force of law—invoked or, at least, employed for the very purpose of depriving her of the custody of the child, and such custody has been withheld from her all along by virtue of the assumed authority of the juvenile court to do so. Since taken from her, she has endeavored, through her personal efforts and those of her relations, to secure the return of the child. Under a representation and belief that she could not do anything toward obtaining the restoration to her until the expiration of a year, which the memorandum of the superior judge sitting in the juvenile proceedings showed was the period for which he had ordered her into the custody of Mrs. Merriman, she waited until the expiration of that time, appeared and made her application to the court in the juvenile proceedings for an order to that effect, to be answered by an effort to deprive her permanently of her child through adoption proceedings, under the claim that she had abandoned her. This evidence clearly shows that there was no abandonment of the child by its mother within the terms of the Code provision, which amounts simply to the general and accepted legal definition of abandonment; but, on the contrary, the evidence clearly and affirmatively shows that there was no abandonment of the child by the mother in any sense. The findings of the superior court, both as to desertion and abandonment, are not sustained by the evidence.

It is insisted by appellant that the proceedings in the juvenile court respecting this child, and the order assigning its custody to Mrs. Merriman, were void. We are not called on to pass on that question. It is entirely immaterial as far as the present proceeding is concerned.

[8] Appellant asks for an order of this court directing the restoration of the child to its mother. We have nothing to do with the custody of the child in this proceeding. If, as claimed by appellant, the juvenile proceedings are void, and the child illegally detained thereunder from its mother, she has a clear legal way to obtain possession of it under habeas corpus proceedings.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 406

ACME LUMBER CO. v. WESSLING et al.
(Civ. 997.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 10, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 7, 1912.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 74*)—"CONTRACT"—RECORD—SEPARATE AND DISTINCT CONTRACTS.

A contract for the construction of a shed, and subsequent contracts for remodeling an adjacent stable and the removal of the partition wall between the shed and stable, so as to make both structures one building, cannot be joined together and treated as one individual "contract"; but they must be treated as separate and distinct contracts, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, requiring the recording of a building contract when the amount to be paid thereunder exceeds $1,000.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 109, 110; Dec. Dig. § 74.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1513-1534; vol. 8, pp. 7615, 7616.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 140*)—CLAIM OF LIEN—VALIDITY—"CONDITIONS."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that a claim of lien by an original contractor must contain a statement of his demand, less credits, the name of the owner, the name of the person by whom he was employed, a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract, and a description of the property to be charged with the lien, does not require that a claim of lien, to be valid, should set forth that the demand was based on more than one contract, and then segregate and separately state the amount of each, though the evidence in support of the lien showed that the work was performed on separate and distinct structures under separate and distinct contracts; the word "conditions" referring only to those provisions which enter into and form a part of the contract and are essential to make it binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 237, 238; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1394-1400.]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 134*)—CREATION OF LIEN—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The creation of a mechanic's lien is statutory, and to constitute a valid lien the statutory directions must be complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

Where, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the evidence showed that a structure was built for an agreed price, while the claim of lien stated that the work performed and material supplied were to be paid for on the basis of reasonable value, and there was evidence that the prices charged were the prevailing market prices, the claim of lien was substantially true, and not at variance with the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

A claim of lien must contain a true statement of the facts required by the statute, and unless so stated the variance between the claim and the evidence is fatal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

6. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

Where the complaint in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien proceeded on the theory that the claim of lien was founded on a single contract, and the evidence showed that the lien was founded on several separate contracts, but defendant was not prevented from availing himself of any defense, the variance between the pleadings and proof was not material, and was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens; Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the Acme Lumber Company against M. A. Wessling and another. From an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for appellant. J. Samuels, for respondent Wessling.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order denying a new trial in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The claim of lien was made and filed by Hubbs & Lear as original contractors, and then assigned to the plaintiff. The contract upon which the claim of lien is founded is stated in the claim of lien to be, in substance, as follows:

Hubbs & Lear agreed with the defendant Faris to alter and repair a certain building or buildings on certain premises reputed to be owned by the defendant Wessling. By the terms of the contract, as stated in the claim of lien, "said Hubbs & Lear were to alter, reconstruct, and repair said building or buildings as directed by said Joseph Faris, furnish all the labor and materials necessary therefor, and were to be paid the reasonable value thereof. No time of payment was agreed upon between the said Hubbs & Lear and the said Joseph Faris, and no time was agreed upon when said work should be completed." It was alleged in the plaintiff's complaint and in the claim of lien that the reasonable value of the labor and material furnished and supplied in the performance of the contract was the sum of $1,915.81, of which the sum of $562.25, and no more, had been paid. The complaint and claim of lien are silent as to whether or not the contract stated therein was in writing and recorded.

The evidence adduced at the trial in support of the claim of lien was to the effect that in the month of June, 1906, the defendant Faris entered into an oral contract with the lien claimants, Hubbs & Lear, whereby they agreed to construct a shed for the stated price of $232, upon a lot of land used and occupied by Faris as a tenant of the defendant Wessling. This was the only contract entered into at this time by Hubbs & Lear with the defendant Faris. Work upon the shed was commenced and completed pursuant to this contract. Prior to and at the time of the execution of the contract and the commencement of the work thereunder, Faris, as a tenant of the defendant Wessling, was occupying a stable building situated upon the same lot of land upon which the shed was erected. A week or more after the execution of the contract for the construction of the shed, and while work thereunder was progressing, Hubbs & Lear entered into a second separate and distinct verbal contract with the defendant Faris to tear out the old stalls in the adjacent stable and replace them with new stalls. No other or additional work in or about the stable was agreed upon or mentioned at this time. The price agreed upon for this particular piece of work was the reasonable market value of the labor and material. Thereafter, from time to time and as a result of several separate and distinct agreements, further alterations of the stable were made by Hubbs & Lear; the reasonable market value thereof being agreed upon as the price of each piece of work in every instance. The work performed upon the stable was not done in accordance with any preconceived plans and specifications, but was performed from time to time as ordered and directed by the defendant Faris, and in its entirety consisted of remodeling the attic, reconstructing the stalls, floors, and mangers of the stable, and installing of harness and robe rooms and an office, and the remodeling of the entire front of the stable. The employment to install the harness room and office was made a month after the first employment to tear out the old stalls. Finally, when the shed originally contracted for and the reconstruction of the stable were both completed, the defendant Faris directed the removal of a partition wall, which was standing between the shed and the stable, and, when this was done, both structures, for all practical purposes, constituted one building.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The reasonable market value of the labor performed and material supplied in the erection of the shed and the reconstruction of the stable was shown to be the amount stated in the claim of lien, $1,915.81. It was further shown in evidence that the defendant Wessling "was present on the premises and saw all the work going on," and it was not pleaded or pretended in her behalf that she had posted the notice of nonresponsibility permitted by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, under the provisions of section 1185 of the same Code, if the contract had been reduced to writing and recorded, would have relieved the land from the burden of the lien for the improvements made thereon at the direction of her tenant Faris.

Although duly served with process, the defendant Faris did not appear in the case, and accordingly default was entered against him. Plaintiff was nonsuited, upon motion of the defendant Wessling, upon the grounds: (1) "That the contract as set out in plaintiff's complaint, in the notice of lien, and as sought to be proven is void for want of recordation, and that by reason thereof no cause of action lies against the defendant Wessling; (2) that the proof adduced with respect to said alleged contract demonstrated that there were at least two, if not more, separable contracts, and that by reason thereof there was a fatal variance between said proof and the notice of lien and contract as set out in the complaint."

But one point is presented and discussed in support of the appeal, and that involves the question as to whether or not the lower court was justified in granting a nonsuit upon either or both of the grounds stated. We are of the opinion that the evidence adduced at the trial in support of the claim or lien did not warrant a nonsuit upon either ground.

Counsel on both sides have devoted several pages of their respective briefs to a discussion of the question as to whether or not the contract stated in the claim of lien was void, and incapable of sustaining the lien, because not expressed in writing and recorded. Upon this phase of the case it is one of plaintiff's contentions that all of the work performed by Hubbs & Lear was done under the first contract to construct the shed, and that the several items of labor and material supplied in the subsequent alteration of the stable were but incidents of the initial contract, which must be considered as extra work and that, inasmuch as the original contract was for the sum of $232, it cannot be held to be invalid, because it was not expressed in writing and recorded, notwithstanding that the aggregate amount of the cost of the extras was far in excess of $1,000.

[1] We are not prepared to say whether or not such a contract would ordinarily fall within the purview of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that a building contract must be expressed in writing and recorded when the amount to be paid thereunder exceeds the sum of $1,000. However that may be, no such contract or question confronts us under the facts of this case; for as we have shown, and as is conceded by counsel for the defendant Wessling, it was clearly and without conflict established by the evidence that the initial contract was "a definite contract at a definite price" for a distinct piece of work, which, at its inception, had no apparent or necessary connection with the work subsequently performed under several other separate and distinct contracts for the reconstruction of the stable. This being so, it is obvious that the initial contract for the construction of the shed and the several subsequent separate contracts for the reconstruction of the stable cannot be joined together and treated as one individual contract. They must be treated as separate and distinct contracts for amounts less than $1,000 (Clark v. Beyrle, 160 Cal. 306, 116 Pac. 739), and, when so considered, it is evident that it was not necessary to their validity that they should have been expressed in writing and recorded.

[2] This view of the evidence brings us to a consideration of the alleged variance between the contract stated in the claim of lien and the contract, or rather contracts, shown by the evidence to have been actually made. It is the contention of the defendant Wessling that the claim of lien is fatally at variance with the evidence in this: That the claim of lien purports to be founded upon a single contract for the alteration of an existing building, whereas the evidence shows that the labor and materials for which the lien is claimed were actually supplied under several separate and distinct contracts. In other words, it is the contention of the defendant Wessling that the claim of lien, to be valid, should have been framed upon the theory that the work and labor was performed and supplied under several distinct contracts for separate and distinct amounts, and that those contracts and their amounts should have been segregated and separately stated in the claim of lien.

Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it existed when the claim of lien in the case at bar was filed, required that a claim of lien by an original contractor, to be valid, should contain (1) a statement of his demand, less all just credits and set-offs; (2) the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known; (3) the name of the person by whom he was employed or to whom he furnished the materials; (4) a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract; and (5) a description of the property to be charged with the lien sufficient for identification. The requirement of the statute that the claim of lien shall state the "conditions" of the contract does not mean that the fact that the work was performed under several contracts is a circumstance which must be stated as a "condition" of the contract. The "conditions" of a contract which the statute contemplates and requires to be stated are those provisions which enter into and form a part of the contract and are essential to make it a binding contract.

[3] The creation of a mechanic's lien is statutory, and, in order to constitute a valid lien, it is necessary only to do the things which the statute directs shall be done, and, in our opinion, the claim of lien, in all of its essential particulars, conforms to every requirement of the statute. It contains a description of the property to be charged by the lien; a statement of the demand upon which the lien is founded, less credits and offsets; the name of the reputed owner; the name of the person by whom the contractor was employed, and to whom the labor and materials were furnished; and, finally, it states "the terms, time given, and conditions of the contract." This is all that the statute requires, and therefore we think it was not necessary to the validity of the claim of lien that it should set forth that the demand was based upon more than one contract, and then segregate and separately state the amount of each, even though the evidence adduced in support of the lien shows that the work and labor for which the lien is claimed was performed upon separate and distinct structures under separate and distinct contracts. Kritzer v. Tracy Engineering Co., 16 Cal. App. 287, 116 Pac. 700; Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 408.

[4] The fact that the evidence disclosed that the shed was constructed for the agreed price of $232, while the claim of lien stated that all of the work performed and materials supplied were to be paid for on the basis of their reasonable value, did not, under all of the evidence, constitute a fatal, or any, variance. The action was brought to enforce a lien for the reasonable value of the entire work and materials, and as there was evidence to the effect that the prices charged for each piece of work, including the construction of the shed, were "the prevailing market prices at the time for labor and materials," it results that the claim of lien was substantially true and not at variance with the evidence. Star Mill & L. Co. v. Porter, 4 Cal. App. 470, 88 Pac. 497; Lucas v. Rea, 10 Cal. App. 641, 102 Pac. 822.

[5, 6] It may be conceded that there is a variance between the pleadings and the proof to the extent that the complaint apparently proceeds upon the theory that the claim of lien was founded upon a single contract, while the evidence showed that in fact the lien was founded upon several separate contracts. A variance between the pleadings and the proof, however, is not governed by the same strict rules which apply to a variance between the claim of lien and the proof. The claim of lien must contain a true statement of the facts required by the statute, and unless so stated the variance is fatal; but a variance between the pleading and proof is not material, unless the adverse party has been thereby misled to his prejudice. Santa Monica, etc., v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555; Star Mill & L. Co. v. Porter, supra; Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

No good reason has been advanced for the claim that the defendant was prejudiced by the variance between the pleadings and the proof in the present case. The defendant was not thereby prevented from setting up and availing herself of any defense which she may have had to the action. The action was for the reasonable value of the labor and materials supplied under the contract as pleaded, and inasmuch as the several contracts shown in evidence were identical in substance and effect with "the terms, time given, and conditions" of the pleaded contract, we are unable to perceive how the defendant could have been misled to her prejudice by the variance. Ehlers v. Wannack Bros., 118 Cal. 310, 314, 50 Pac. 433; Hartley v. Murtha, 5 App. Div. 408, 39 N. Y. Supp. 212; Higgins v. Newtown, etc., R. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 604; Farron v. Sherwood, 17 N. Y. 227; Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250-259, 23 Pac. 127.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

19 Cal. App. 368

WALKER v. DIXON et al. (Civ. 1,118.)
(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. June 29, 1912.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 527*)—DISCHARGE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a note, evidence held insufficient to sustain a defense of payment and discharge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1847-1855; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

2. PLEDGES (§ 30*)—COLLECTION OF PLEDGED NOTES—LACHES—SUFFICIENCY OF SHOWING.

A defense of laches in the collection of notes pledged, relied on to discharge the pledgors' debt to the pledgee, must fail where the date of the notes is not disclosed, nor the time when suit was brought thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-85; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by B. F. Walker against A. H. Dixon and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

E. L. Foster, for appellants. C. E. Arnold and C. W. Miller, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was upon a promissory note executed by defendants to one Walker. Walker sold and transferred the note to the Laton State Bank; this being done in 1905. In 1906 defendants, holding certain notes against J. J. Fenn and others, aggregating $1,600, transferred said notes to the bank under an agreement that when collected the proceeds should be applied, so far as necessary, to the payment of the Walker note, and the balance to be paid to defendants. Subsequently—at what date cannot be determined from the bill of exceptions—an action was brought upon the Fenn notes and $667 collected thereon, which was paid to the bank, leaving a balance due on the Walker note. Walker, upon demand of the bank, as indorser, took up the Dixon note and brought this action to recover the balance unpaid. The answer alleged the payment and discharge of the note. The action was tried by the court, which found in favor of plaintiff and against defendants upon the issue presented. From an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

[1] The only evidence in the record having the semblance of supporting defendants' answer is the statement of a witness that in 1906, when the Dixons transferred to the Laton State Bank notes aggregating $1,600, payable to them and signed by Fenn, there was an agreement upon the part of the bank that the note sued on should be thereby paid and discharged, and that out of the proceeds when collected the bank, after applying sufficient to discharge the note sued on, should pay the balance to the Dixons. The positive evidence on the part of plaintiff is that the Fenn notes were received by the bank as collateral security for the note sued on, and not otherwise; in fact, the whole evidence in the record indicates such to have been the contract between defendants and the bank. There is and can be no controversy that the bank properly applied all of the money it received upon the Fenn notes.

[2] Counsel for appellant suggests such laches upon the part of the bank in the collection of the Fenn notes as would have the effect to discharge the Dixons. There is nothing in this proposition. The maturity of the Fenn notes is not disclosed, the time when the action was brought does not appear, and there is nothing in the record to indicate laches, even were such a defense otherwise presented by the record.

The findings of the court have ample support from the evidence, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 379

In re OLSON'S ESTATE.
JOHNSON et al. v. OLSON.
(Civ. 956.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 2, 1912.)

1. WILLS (§ 156*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Testatrix's soundness of mind and body does not imply immunity from undue influence exercised by her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 382; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. WILLS (§ 155*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—ELEMENTS.

Duress, menace, or fraud need not be shown to establish such undue influence as invalidates a will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 375-381; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

3. WILLS (§ 155*)—"UNDUE INFLUENCE."

"Undue influence," such as invalidates a will, is any improper or wrongful constraint, machination, urgency, or persuasion, whereby the will of the person is overborne, and he is induced to do, or forbear to do, an act which he would not do, or would do, if left to act freely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 375-381; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7166-7172, 7823-7824.]

4. WILLS (§ 282*)—CONTESTS — PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

In a will contest, allegations that through contestee's "aforesaid relations," and through undue influence over testatrix, as averred in the complaint and grounds of opposition, contestee acquired over testatrix an influence, whereby he was enabled to and did procure her to make the will by which all her property was to go to him to the exclusion of the remaining heirs at law, sufficiently show the particular acts involving undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 640; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In the absence of the evidence, it will be presumed, on appeal from a judgment sustaining the contest of a will on the ground of undue influence, that findings conforming to contestant's pleadings were sustained by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2899, 2911-2916, 3673, 3674, 3676, 3678; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

6. WILLS (§ 164*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

That testatrix's husband accompanied her to the attorney's office where she made her will, and remained in the office within hearing, and in a position so that he could see the parties in executing the will, and left the office with testatrix, was properly shown on an issue whether he exercised undue influence over her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 403-414; Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

7. WILLS (§ 166*)—CONTEST—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

On contest of a will, under which testatrix gave all her property to her second husband to the exclusion of her children and grandchildren, a statement in the will that the children and grandchildren had received their full share of her property is not conclusive against the charge of exercise of undue influence by the husband, though the statement was not denied in the grounds of contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 421-437; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphy, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Albertina Olson, deceased. From a decree refusing to probate decedent's will, Oliver Olson appeals adversely to William Johnson and others. Affirmed.

Crosby & Richardson and W. B. Rinehart, for appellant. Pierce H. Ryan and G. W. Hunter, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll from the decree of the superior court of Alameda county, refusing probate of the will of Albertina Olson, wife of Oliver Olson, appellant herein. A general demurrer to the grounds of contest was overruled, no special demurrer was interposed, and Olson, contestee, answered, denying specifically the averments of the contest relating to the issue of undue influence. The cause was tried by the court, without a jury, and contestants had judgment.

The will is brief. It first declares that the testator is of sound mind, and is "not acting under duress, menace, fraud or undue influence of any person whatever;" secondly, it devises and bequeaths to Oliver Olson, her husband, all of her property, and further states: "I have eight descendants, to wit, five children [naming them] and three grandchildren [naming them] whom I purposely omit from the provisions of this will, as I have already advanced and paid to each of them his or her full share of my property;" lastly, she appoints her husband executor without bonds. The "descendants," except Elfrida Hall, a daughter, are the contestants mentioned in the will.

It is contended by appellant, first, that the written grounds of contest are insufficient to constitute grounds of opposition to the probate of the will; and, second, that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment.

The findings, with slight difference in one or two particulars, follow the language of the complaint.

The ground alleged in support of the contest is the undue influence of the husband over his wife in securing the execution of the will. It appears from the contest that Mrs. Olson died in the city of Oakland, Alameda county, on February 13, 1910, leaving estate therein and in Humboldt county of the value of over $20,000; that, prior to her death, to wit, September 11, 1908, she executed the will in question, naming her husband executor thereof; that on April 21, 1910, Oliver Olson, contestee, filed his petition in the superior court of Alameda county, praying probate of said document as the last will of his wife, Albertina, and that letters testamentary issue to him. Following these averments, it is alleged, in paragraph 7, that Oliver Olson and Albertina were married in Humboldt county on August 5, 1905, from which time and until her death, "and particularly at the time of making her alleged will and testament, the said Albertina Olson reposed great confidence in her said husband, the said Oliver Olson, and during all times the said Oliver Olson held a real authority over the said Albertina Olson, and during all said times the said Oliver Olson used such confidence and authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over her to procure her to make her alleged will solely in his favor, and thereby disinheriting all of her said children and grandchildren." Paragraph 8 following is to like effect, alleging "an apparent authority," instead of "a real authority," as in paragraph 7.

Paragraph 9 is as follows: "That said alleged will and testament, offered for probate as the last will and testament of said Albertina Olson, was procured to be made by reason of and through the undue influence exerted upon and over her by said Oliver Olson, in whose sole favor and interest such will was made, and that said paper writing and alleged will was and is the direct result of such undue influence exerted as aforesaid, and that said Albertina Olson was not, at the time of the making of the said alleged will, free from undue influence, but was then and there, and for a long time prior thereto had been, and continued to be, acting under and subject to the undue influence of said Oliver Olson, and that the said alleged will was procured to be made by means of and through the undue influence of said Oliver Olson, and the said will was the direct result of the undue influence exerted by said Oliver Olson over and upon said Albertina Olson; and in further support of these averments of undue influence, contestants allege upon information and belief, the following facts." Then follow 23 or 24 subdivisions of paragraph 9, designated, alphabetically, "a" to "w," inclusive. Substantially the facts therein set forth are as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

(a) That at the time of their said marriage Olson was a strong man, mentally and physically, of the age of 41 years, and Albertina was of the age of 63 years, and was the mother of six children, mostly grown. (b) For several years prior to the marriage of Oliver and Albertina, she resided on a farm in Humboldt county, the community property of herself and her husband, Adam Johnson, who died in May, 1898. (c) For several years prior to the marriage of Oliver and Albertina the said Oliver was employed on said farm by Albertina, and during all said time "had great and undue influence over" her, then Albertina Johnson, "and managed her said farm and business to suit himself, and sold the crops raised on said farm and collected the money received therefrom and conducted the household affairs of said Albertina Johnson," purchased the farm and household supplies, and used the income of the farm for such purposes "and for his own purposes, the same as if it was his own money." (d) Prior to and after his marriage with Albertina, and thereafter, he in like manner managed said farm and used the income therefrom. (e) On or about September, 1906, he induced Albertina to remove to Oakland to reside, "with the object and purpose in his mind of getting her where she would be more susceptible to his influence and more subject to his control." (e½) During the spring of 1898, the said Adam Johnson contemplated making a trip to the Klondike, Alaska, and on or about the 10th day of February, 1898, he, "without consideration, executed a deed to said farm to Albertina, which was placed in escrow, to be delivered at his death, which said deed was thereafter at his death delivered to her. (f) In August, 1906, Albertina sold said farm for $37,500, receiving $21,500 in cash and notes and mortgages for the balance. (g) The said Oliver took over $20,000 of said money to Oakland and deposited the same there in a bank in his own name, and drew therefrom money "as he saw fit, and invested a large part of the same and used much of the same for his own purposes." (h) Albertina was "ignorant of and inexperienced in business affairs and methods, and through the undue influence of the said Oliver" was induced to permit him to invest a large part of said money in Oakland property, amounting to $6,000, "and to take the title thereto in his own name." (i) "At all times mentioned herein," Oliver was "the sole agent, confidential adviser, and business manager of the said Albertina Olson, and as such gained a complete mastery and control over her." (j) Long prior to her said marriage with him, Oliver conceived the plan of acquiring possession of Albertina's property, and had the design to marry her for said purpose, and "during the year 1901 the said Oliver Olson proposed to one Walter James, who was then courting one of the daughters of said Albertina Olson, and said to said Walter James: 'You take the girl, and I will take the old lady. We will sell the place and get out of here.'" (k) Albertina was so "strongly under the influence of the said Oliver Olson that within two months after the death of her former husband, Adam Johnson, she permitted the said Oliver Olson to use and wear the clothes formerly used and worn by her deceased husband." (l) At all times mentioned herein, Oliver showed a feeling of jealousy and hatred towards the children and grandchildren of Albertina, "and unduly persuaded" her to disinherit them; that she could not speak of them in his presence in terms of affection without incurring his displeasure, and she was in constant fear of him, lest she might say something to offend him; that he sought to make her believe that he owed no duty to them, and that they cared for her only for her property; that he objected to her corresponding with her said children, or to receive letters from them, and was angry "and berated her" when she did so; that he unduly persuaded her to remove from Humboldt county "to get away from her children, whose homes were in said county, in order that he might have a better opportunity to unduly influence the said Albertina Olson and get control of her said money and property, and to have the same put in his own name; that said Albertina Olson was continually under the influence and control of said Oliver Olson and subject to his will, and was compelled to put her money and property in his own name, and to make said alleged will, leaving everything to him." (m to r) The relations between Albertina and her children to the time of her death were of a friendly nature. Oliver sought to prejudice his wife against her said children, and often told her she must not let them visit her. That in September, 1908, Oliver, at the home of one of the contestants, "for the purpose of unduly influencing" her against her said children, declared to her that she "should cut out the kids with a dollar," meaning her children and grandchildren. That he, for like purpose and with like intent, told Albertina that he did not want Mrs. Hubbard to come near her, and that she must make a will and cut Mrs. Hubbard out with one dollar. That prior to making said will, for the purpose of unduly influencing her, he said to Albertina that she should cut Freda out with one dollar, meaning her daughter Mrs. Elfreda Hall. (s) At the time said alleged will was made, "said

Oliver Olson accompanied the said Albertina Olson to the office of the attorney in the city of Eureka, who prepared said alleged will, at the time said alleged will was prepared, and took an active part in the preparation of the same." (t) At this time they were visiting Amy James, one of the daughters and contestants, and during this time Oliver urged Albertina to make her will; and (u) when they went to the office of the attorney to have said will prepared, neither Oliver nor Albertina informed said Amy James of their said purpose, but concealed from her and from all said children and grandchildren the fact that a will had been made, and none of said children or grandchildren knew of said will until after her death. (v) That during said marriage of Oliver and Albertina, Oliver was acting as the confidential agent of Albertina, and during all said time she was subject to the undue influence and control of her said husband, who "took advantage of his said position and influence to obtain said alleged will and acquire said property." (w) "That by reason of said relations aforesaid, and the exercise of undue influence over her, as averred in the complaint and grounds of opposition herein, the said Oliver acquired over the mind of the said Albertina Olson an influence, whereby he was enabled to and did procure her to make the said alleged will, wherein and whereby all her property was to go to him to the exclusion of all the rest of her heirs at law."

Appellant relies upon the rule stated in Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 274, and Estate of Sheppard, 149 Cal. 219, 85 Pac. 312, that undue influence as ground of contest is but a conclusion of law to be drawn from facts (not evidence of the facts), which must be stated, "to the end that the court, either upon demurrer to the statement of the grounds of contest or the verdict, may determine whether, as a matter of law, such facts so pleaded or found constituted a valid reason why the purported paper should not be admitted to probate." Estate of Gharky.

[1] Attention is called to the absence of averment or finding that Mrs. Olson was weak in mind or body, or lacked testamentary capacity by reason of her age, or any infirmity, or that she acted under the exercise of menace, duress, or fraud. Soundness of mind and body does not imply immunity from undue influence. It may require greater ingenuity to unduly influence a person of sound mind and body, and more evidence may be required to show that such a person was overcome than in the case of one weak of body and mind. But history and experience teach that the minds of strong men and women have often been overborne, and they have been by a master mind persuaded to consent to what, in their sober and normal moments, and free from undue influence, they would not have done.

[2, 3] "Undue influence is quite distinct from testamentary capacity. The former presupposes the existence of the latter." 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 497. Nor are the elements of duress, menace, or fraud necessary to be shown to establish such undue influence. Such influence is, in a sense, a fraud, when exercised to the injury of the rightful heirs of a testator and to the advantage of the one exercising it; but it is not fraud in the sense used by appellant. Undue influence is "any improper or wrongful constraint, machination, urgency, or persuasion, whereby the will of the person is overborne, and he is induced to do, or forbear to do, an act which he would not do, or would do, if left to act freely." Id. 453. Or, as the Civil Code defines it: "Undue influence consists: 1. In the use, by one in whom a confidence is reposed by another, and who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage over him." Civ. Code, § 1575. A relation of confidence and trust is alleged to have existed between Oliver and Albertina, both during the several years of Mrs. Johnson's widowhood and during their marriage, arising from Oliver's acting in the capacity of confidential agent at all times and from the relation of husband and wife after he married Mrs. Johnson. It was said, in Welch's Will, 6 Cal. App. 47, 91 Pac. 337: "While such confidential relation [husband and wife] does not, of itself, in this state raise a presumption of undue influence in regard to making a will, yet it is important in weighing the evidence in all cases of this character; in fact, it has been held in some jurisdictions that there is a presumption of undue influence in such cases when such confidential relations exist."

[4] Appellant's attack upon the complaint or grounds of contest is made upon each paragraph separately, claiming, in effect, that the pleader has failed to allege that the particular act pleaded resulted in so far overcoming the will of the testatrix as to lead her to substitute his will for her own, and to destroy her free agency. But appellant overlooks the final averment, as well as some others that might be noted, where the pleader avers that by reason of Olson's "aforesaid relations," and by reason of the "undue influence over her, as averred in the complaint and grounds of opposition herein, the said Oliver Olson acquired over the mind of said Albertina Olson an influence, wherein and whereby he was enabled to and did procure her to make the said alleged will," by which all her property "was to go to him to the exclusion of all the rest of her heirs at law." The grounds of opposition in their entirety must be looked to, and not the disjointed parts, for a right conception of their sufficiency; and, thus considering them, we feel quite certain that the facts alleged are sufficient to withstand a general demurrer.

[5] The story of the relations of these two persons, continuing unbroken from the death of her first husband until the death of the testatrix, as set forth in the contest, was, we must presume in the absence of evidence, fully confirmed at the trial and justified the findings of the court. Finding 9, set forth above, is a distinct finding by the court that the will in question was procured through the undue influence exerted over his wife by her husband, and "is the direct result of such undue influence exerted as aforesaid," and that the testatrix "was not, at the time of the making of the said alleged will, free from undue influence, but was then and there, and for a long time prior thereto had been, and continued to be, acting under and subject to the undue influence of said Oliver Olson," and that the will "was procured to be made by means of and through the undue influence of said Oliver Olson," and "was the direct result of the undue influence exerted by said Oliver Olson over and upon said Albertina Olson." Here is the ultimate fact clearly and distinctly found, and, we must presume, on sufficient evidence. If it be claimed that this finding can have no greater force than may be derived from the findings as specifically set forth, still we must hold that, as the findings of fact are substantially the same as alleged in the complaint, and as the latter sufficiently set forth grounds of contest, the findings are sufficient to support the judgment.

[6] The court did not find, as was alleged in the contest, that Olson took an active part in the execution of the will; but it did find that he accompanied the testatrix to the attorney's office at the time the will was prepared, "and remained in said office within the hearing of, and in a position so that he could see the parties in the execution of the said will, and departed from said office with said Albertina Olson." This circumstance was pertinent and of probative force, and was properly considered in connection with other circumstances. In the Estate of Snowball, 157 Cal. 307, 107 Pac. 601, a similar circumstance was given significance, where the favored daughter of the testatrix went to the office of the lawyer with the testatrix, who then made the will "while the daughter remained in another room."

[7] The statement in the will by the testatrix that she had advanced and paid to each of her children and grandchildren his or her full share of her property is urged as going far to rebut any inference of unfairness or undue influence. And it is claimed that because the statement was not denied in the grounds of contest it must be presumed to be true. Shell's Estate, 28 Colo. 167, 63 Pac. 413, 53 L. R. A. 387, 89 Am. St. Rep. 181, is cited. In that case the testator devised all his property to his second wife, making no provision for his children by a former marriage. The probate of the will was opposed. The testator stated the reason for omitting his children to be that he had made ample provision for them. The ground of contest was undue influence. The cause was tried, and the evidence went up with the record on appeal, from which the reviewing court was able to say that there was no attempt made to controvert this fact; and hence the court presumed it to be true, and, thus assuming, found that there was nothing unnatural in not making provision for the children of the first wife. We do not think we can indulge a presumption that the statement referred to in the will now here was true. There is a finding (21) that the testatrix "was continually under the influence and control of Olson, and was subject to his will, and was compelled to put her money and property in his name and to make said alleged will leaving everything to him." Other findings show that the contest involved all the property ever owned by the testatrix, and rebut any inference that she had given her children and grandchildren their full share, or, indeed, any share, of her property.

We do not feel called upon to comment further upon the facts as alleged and found, or to controvert the inferences indulged by appellant, which, he insists, may be drawn in entire harmony with the assumption that the testatrix acted in accordance with her own free and untrammelled will. While such inferences might, under the compelling force of evidence, have justified the court in reaching a different conclusion, still we think the facts as found, supported, as they must have been, by the evidence, fully warranted the court in refusing the probate of the will.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

19 Cal. App. 374

STANTON v. WELDY et al. (Civ. 971.)
(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 1, 1912.)

EVIDENCE (§ 432*)—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECITAL.

Under Civ. Code, § 1615, which provides that the burden to show want of consideration to support an instrument is on one seeking to avoid the instrument, defendants in a suit on a note were entitled to show want of consideration, though the note recited that it was given for the price of one-seventh of a stallion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1981-1989; Dec. Dig. § 432.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by C. O. Stanton against J. R. Weldy and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. H. Hatton, for appellants. L. L. Den-nett and S. G. Tompkins, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action on two certain instruments, alleged to be promissory notes, each reading as follows: "$500.00. San Jose, Cal., Nov. 14, 1906. For value received, we promise to pay C. O. Stanton or bearer, five hundred dollars, gold coin of the United States, with interest thereon from day of date until paid at the rate of six per cent. per annum in the following manner, to wit: On or before one year. This note is given for the purchase price of one-seventh of Percheron stallion, name Decide, dark grey. Foaled April 20th, 1901, No. (52,180) 40,762, and the express condition of the sale of said property is such that the title, ownership and right of possession thereof does not pass from the said C. O. Stanton, or their assigns, until the principal and interest above specified, and all costs, are paid in full; and the holder of this note shall have the right and full power to take possession of said property at any time they may deem themselves unsafe or insecure, and all payments made thereon shall be retained by the holder thereof; and in case said property, together with all payments made thereon, shall not be equal in value to the sum of said note, together with accrued interest and costs, including a reasonable attorney fee in the premises, at the time it shall be taken by the holder hereof, then this obligation shall continue to be binding; and the purchaser hereby agrees to pay any deficiency on demand, and that the same may be collected by due process of law. J. A. Weldy. J. R. Weldy."

Alleging nonpayment, and that the sum of $150 is a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed in the action, the prayer is for judgment for $1,177.50, principal and interest, and $150, attorney's fees.

General and special demurrers were overruled, and defendants filed a verified answer to the unverified complaint, denying, on information and belief, its averments alleging the execution and delivery of said promissory notes, denying directly that there is due and owing or unpaid the principal or interest, or any other amount, and, for further answer alleged that defendants "received no consideration for the so-called promissory note set forth in said first cause of action," and like averments as to the second alleged cause of action. The cause was tried by a jury, and, by the direction of the court, the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff. Defendants appeal from the judgment on the verdict, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff raised the point on the answer that the denial on information and belief was not a sufficient denial of the execution of the promissory note. The point was not pressed nor ruled upon, and plaintiff proceeded to put in his evidence.

Plaintiff called J. A. Weldy, one of the defendants, who testified to the execution of the two notes by himself and his brother, the other defendant; that he (the witness) did not deliver them to Mr. Stanton, the payee, and did not know how he got them; that he had seen Mr. Stanton, but that he had had no business with him. Mr. Tompkins, attorney for plaintiff, over defendants' objection, testified that the plaintiff in the action delivered the said two documents, the subject of the action, to witness, and that the purpose of the evidence was to show plaintiff's possession. The instruments, subject to defendants' objection, were admitted in evidence and read to the jury; whereupon, without further evidence, plaintiff rested.

Defendants moved for a nonsuit on several grounds, which may be thus summarized: That the instruments introduced are not promissory notes, and are not such as import a consideration, or such as, under the Code, give rise to a presumption of a consideration; that the instruments purport to set forth one-seventh of a stallion as the consideration, and there is no evidence of delivery, and, furthermore, delivery of one-seventh of a stallion is impossible; that a promissory note for the payment of a certain sum of money carries with it the presumption of a consideration, but the consideration here is specifically mentioned to be one-seventh of a stallion, and "there must be some proof that that consideration has been given," which is wholly wanting, either in allegation or evidence; that there is no proof of anything done by plaintiff, and, besides, the contract is impossible of performance, and is not enforceable, lacking, as it does, mutuality, plaintiff having promised nothing, even after performance by defendants; that if the instrument be construed as a one-seventh interest in a stallion the same objection would lie, for, while there might be a bill of sale of an interest, there could be no delivery, except the delivery of the stallion; and, finally that there is no evidence of nonpayment, and if nonpayment is presumed from possession of a promissory note such presumption is not indulged by possession alone of a contract such as this. The court denied the motion for nonsuit.

Both of the defendants were called as witnesses on their own behalf, and counsel sought to show by their testimony that they had received no consideration whatever for the so-called promissory notes. To all questions intended to show that no consideration was given for these instruments, objection was made by plaintiff, on the ground that defendants cannot be heard to contradict their writing; "that the recitals contained in the written instrument are conclusive as between the parties to the instrument. The Court: Well, except consideration. Mr.

Tompkins (attorney for plaintiff): And as to the consideration, also, when that recital is contractual in its nature, and not a mere formal recital of consideration [citing cases]. The Court: These cases simply hold that where the consideration is contractual you cannot show any other consideration. Mr. Tompkins: The defense is not here that there has been a failure of consideration. The Court: What is the defense? Mr. Tompkins: The defense is that there was never any consideration. Mr. Hatton: Exactly. The Court: The only person who could object to a matter of this kind would be his creditors; an objection could not be made by either of the parties to the transaction. The court is not authorized to vary the terms of the contract, and cannot do so in this case. The objection will be sustained." Similar rulings were made by the court, and for like reasons, to questions as to whether defendants were ever given possession of the stallion. There was no objection to the form of defendants' questions, or the means by which they sought to show want of consideration. Defendants were refused the evidence on the ground stated in the objection and by the court.

The record thus presents a question which, it seems to us, was erroneously decided by the learned trial judge. We are unable to perceive the distinction upon which the ruling was made—that a failure of consideration may be shown, but not an entire want of consideration, where the latter issue is directly made by the pleadings. This question of consideration is the principal one referred to in respondent's brief. Cases are cited in support of the rule as given in Cyc. vol. 3, p. 377: "The rule permitting parol evidence of another consideration does not apply where the consideration as expressed is in fact a contract, and not a mere statement of fact." That is to say, where the instrument recites the consideration to be, as here, the purchase price of a stallion, a different or some other consideration cannot be shown to dispute or vary the terms of the contract. The cases cited simply hold, as was said by the trial judge, that, where the consideration is contractual, "some other consideration than that set forth in the instrument itself cannot be shown." But such was not the purpose of the evidence offered. There is a wide difference between showing an utter lack of consideration and some other consideration than that mentioned in the agreement. In the latter case a consideration is admitted, but a different one is sought to be shown. In the former the purpose is to show the nonexistence of any consideration. On principle, we can discover no reason for allowing proof of no consideration, where money is the consideration named, and where some article of personal property is named as the consideration. If the promisor received nothing in either case, he may show the fact in defense.

Plaintiff made no attempt to prove a consideration, relying wholly on a presumption. Can it be that a fact so essential to plaintiff's recovery and resting on a presumption cannot be disputed by the fact itself?

Section 1614 of the Civil Code provides that "a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." Section 1615 provides that "the burden of showing a want of consideration sufficient to support an instrument lies with the party seeking to avoid it." How else could defendants successfully carry this burden than by proving "want of consideration"? The objection of plaintiff went to the right of defendants to prove the issue tendered, not to the manner of offering the evidence. Under the view taken by the trial court, no evidence which defendants could have offered would have been received to show want of consideration for the contract.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

19 Cal. App. 333

PEOPLE v. WATSON. (Cr. 246.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 26, 1912.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1178*)—APPEAL—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

Where appellant in a criminal case fails to support his appeal by oral argument or printed brief, the judgment of conviction appealed from must be affirmed, as provided by Pen. Code, § 1253.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3011-3013; Dec. Dig. § 1178.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

John W. Watson was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Davis, Rush & Robinson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement and sentenced to serve a term of two years' imprisonment in the state prison. He appealed to this court from that judgment, and from an order made denying his motion for a new trial.

The record on appeal, consisting of the reporter's and clerk's transcripts, was filed in this court on the 26th day of February, 1912, and thereafter upon stipulation of counsel time was twice extended within which defendant might file a brief in support of his appeal. No brief was filed within the time allowed, and on June 24th this cause was ordered to be submitted. Appellant having failed to support his appeal, either by oral argument or printed brief, the judgment and order must be affirmed. Pen. Code, § 1253; People v. Albitre, 153 Cal. 367, 95 Pac. 653.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 344

INTERLOCKING STONE CO. v. SCRIBNER et al.

ROLLINS v. SCRIBNER et al. (Civ. 938). (District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 28, 1912.)

1. ATTACHMENT (§ 12*) — INTERPLEADER — CROSS-COMPLAINT.

A defendant in an action in interpleader, who files a cross-complaint setting up a cause of action on an express contract for the direct payment of money in the state, and making plaintiff a party defendant, may, on making the affidavit required by Code Civ. Proc. § 538, obtain an attachment against the fund held by plaintiff before its payment into court, and thereby forestall any possible adverse action on the part of any creditor of the codefendant, not made a party defendant in the complaint of interpleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 38, 39; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. INTERPLEADER (§ 32*)—ISSUES.

The court in an action in interpleader, in which defendant files a cross-complaint making plaintiff a party and obtaining an attachment against the fund held by plaintiff before its payment into court, must determine whether the case is a proper one for interpleader; and when that question is determined in the affirmative, and the fund is paid into court, it may discharge plaintiff from liability to the conflicting claimants, who must, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 386, litigate their claims among themselves.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interpleader, Cent. Dig. §§ 72, 73; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action in interpleader by the Interlocking Stone Company against M. G. Scribner and M. E. Rollins, in which the latter appeared and filed a cross-complaint on which an attachment was issued. From an order refusing to dissolve the attachment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Berlin, for appellant. M. C. Decarli, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought in interpleader by plaintiff under section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that, "whenever conflicting claims are, or may be, made upon a person for, or relating to, personal property, or the performance of an obligation, or any portion thereof, such person may bring an action against the conflicting claimants to compel them to interplead and litigate their several claims among themselves."

It appears by the complaint that plaintiff is indebted on an open account to the defendant M. G. Scribner in the sum of $577, and on a promissory note, dated July 30, 1909, for the amount of $275.50 and interest, and on another note, of January 8, 1909, for the amount of $820.10 and interest. That there was, at the time of the commencement of the action, standing upon its books in the name of M. G. Scribner 6,101 shares, and in the name of defendants Neal and Scribner 6,201 shares, of the capital stock of plaintiff corporation. A detailed statement is set out of certain writs of execution and writs of attachment issued against said Scribner in various causes, and, by process of garnishment, levied upon all the property and debts in the hands of plaintiff and belonging or owing to said Scribner. That the defendant E. E. Rollins claims to be the owner by assignment, for value, and before maturity, and before the levy of said attachments and executions, of the two said promissory notes. That on May 26, 1910, the said defendant M. G. Scribner commenced an action in the superior court of Alameda county against plaintiff herein to recover the said sum of $577 due to said Scribner on said open account. The foregoing facts and others are alleged in a manner to make it plain that the defendants should be required to interplead concerning their claims to the moneys and property referred to in the complaint.

The defendant E. E. Rollins appeared and filed a cross-complaint and made plaintiff herein a party defendant thereto. In the cross-complaint the said two promissory notes were set out, and it was alleged that the same were, subsequent to their execution and prior to the filing of said cross-complaint, duly assigned, indorsed, and delivered to said cross-complainant. With said cross-complaint the said Rollins filed an affidavit and undertaking, and had a writ of attachment issued against the property of the said Interlocking Stone Company. Appellant states that this writ was levied upon the property of said company; but as to this the record is silent. The plaintiff herein moved the superior court to dissolve the said attachment; but the motion was denied, and from this order of denial the appeal has been taken. The motion was made upon the ground "that said attachment was improperly and irregularly issued," for the reason that the said affidavit and said undertaking were each "irregular, improper, defective, and void, and upon the further ground that, the above-entitled action being an action in interpleader, the said court has not, nor has the clerk of said court, any jurisdiction or authority to issue an attachment in said action upon the cross-complaint therein."

[1] The said affidavit and undertaking seem to be in proper form, and, indeed, no attack is made upon them in appellant's brief. The last ground mentioned is the only one that is urged for reversal of the order. The contention of appellant is that "the plaintiff claims to be only a stakeholder, and prays that the defendants may be required to interplead among themselves to determine the relative priorities of their claims to the fund in the hands of the stakeholder. The plaintiff has no interest in the controversy among the defendants, and is not a proper party defendant to the cross-complaints of the defendants. It would be a hardship and an injustice to require the plaintiff in such an action of interpleader to plead to 16 or more cross-complaints, when it disclaims any interest in the property, and offers to deliver it to whomsoever the court may determine to be entitled to it. If a defendant does not care to interplead with his codefendants in reference to the subject-matter involved, he should go into another forum to assert his rights; and it may be that there he might proceed by attachment. But even there he must litigate with his codefendants here, or his object cannot be obtained." But it is submitted that appellant has mistaken the form of procedure for relief, and that the apprehension of hardship is more fanciful than real. There is nothing in the law to prevent Rollins from filing a cross-complaint, as he did. He stated a cause of action on an express contract for the direct payment of money in this state. His cause of action was against plaintiff herein, which was made defendant to the cross-complaint. Cross-complainant was thus in a position to make the affidavit required by section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Unless the action is brought against the party who is the asserted debtor, it is apparent that he could not make the affidavit nor secure the writ of attachment. Nor is it perceived why he should go into any other forum and bring an independent action against plaintiff, when he had already been brought into court by the act of plaintiff itself to litigate this very matter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The complaint of Rollins being for a cause of action that constitutes the foundation for the issuance of a writ of attachment, and the affidavit and undertaking being in proper form, and the court having undoubted jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it cannot be said that any irregularity or excess of authority can be affirmed of the proceedings in the court below. To protect Rollins' interest, it may have been entirely unnecessary to have the writ issued, but the money involved was still in the hands of plaintiff herein, and it would seem that Rollins had the legal right, by the process of garnishment before the money was paid into court, to forestall any possible adverse action on the part of some creditor of Scribner, not made a party defendant in the complaint of interpleader.

[2] As far as plaintiff is concerned, as soon as the parties defendant had appeared or defaulted, the court would determine whether it was a proper case for interpleader. The question being determined in the affirmative, upon the payment of the money into court, an order would be made discharging plaintiff from liability to all or any of the conflicting claimants, and the latter would be required to litigate their several claims among themselves. Section 386, Code Civ. Proc. This, of course, would relieve plaintiff of any liability or burden incident to said writ of attachment.

The course of procedure in such cases is discussed in S. F. Savings Union v. Long, 123 Cal. 109, 55 Pac. 709, wherein Judge Temple, speaking for the court, said: "In such cases there may always be a twofold contest: First, as to the right of the plaintiff to bring the suit and to force the defendants to interplead, and, if such right is maintained, the litigation among the defendants. There may be two sets of pleadings: First, those having reference only to the right of the plaintiff to compel the defendants to interplead, and the several complaints of the defendants, in which their respective rights to the subject in controversy are set up. These may be, and usually are, included in the answer to the bill of interpleader. Such answer is then in the nature of a cross-complaint, and should be served upon each defendant, who may answer the same. Whether the plaintiff shall be permitted to maintain such an action is first determined, and if his right is sustained an interlocutory decree is entered, requiring the defendants to litigate their claims inter sese."

Although not disclosed by the record, it is fair to assume that the course, as thus indicated, has long since been pursued, and that plaintiff is no longer a party to the litigation. At any rate, the showing made in the court below does not lead to the conclusion that the order refusing to dissolve the attachment was erroneous. It is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

19 Cal. App. 359

PEOPLE v. BREEDING et al. (Cr. 237.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. June 29, 1912.)

1. LEWDNESS (§§ 1, 5*)—LIVING IN STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The offense denounced by Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), punishing every person living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, can only be committed by one who is married; and an information charging that defendants willfully and unlawfully lived in a state of cohabitation and adultery with each other necessarily implies that they were married to others; and a failure to allege in direct terms that defendants were married to others does not render the information insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-4, 5; Dec. Dig. §§ 1, 5.*]

2. LEWDNESS (§ 1*)—LIVING IN A STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY.

The state on a trial of defendants, charged with living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, in violation of Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), must show that each of the defendants was lawfully married to another; and where there was no evidence of the marriage of one of the defendants the prosecution must be dismissed as to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-4; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. LEWDNESS (§ 1*)—LIVING IN A STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY.

Prior to the amendment of Pen. Code, § 269a, by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), punishing persons living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, it was not a crime to live in a state of cohabitation and adultery, unless the same was open and notorious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-4; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

4. LEWDNESS (§ 9*)—LIVING IN STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the information charged a violation of Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), punishing every person living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, evidence of statements by one of the defendants as to the defendants living together, made prior to the adoption of the amendment, was inadmissible to establish the crime, or for any other purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

5. LEWDNESS (§ 1*)—"LIVING IN A STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY."

The words "living in a state of cohabitation and adultery" in Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), punishing living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, mean the living together as husband and wife; and to justify a conviction it must appear that there existed between defendants an adulterous cohabitation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-4; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4191-4192.]

6. LEWDNESS (§ 10*)—LIVING IN STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not to justify a conviction of living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, in violation of Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

William Breeding and another were convicted of crime, and they appeal. Reversed.

Dick Foye Harding and George L. Hood-enpyl, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW J. Defendants were convicted upon an information charging them with the crime specified in section 269a of the Penal Code; it being alleged that on or about the 25th day of May, 1911, they did willfully and unlawfully live in a state of cohabitation and adultery with each other, etc.

[1] The charge of living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, an offense which can be committed by one only who is married, necessarily implies that the accused was a married person. Hence the failure to allege in direct terms that defendants were married did not render the information insufficient. People v. Silva, 8 Cal. App. 349, 97 Pac. 202.

[2] Since those only who occupy the status of married persons are capable of committing the crime with which defendants were charged (Ex parte Sullivan, 17 Cal. App. 278, 119 Pac. 526; In re Grace Cooper [Sup.] 121 Pac. 318), and since by implication the information alleged that each of the defendants was lawfully married to other than his or her codefendant, it was therefore necessary, in order to justify a conviction, to prove such implied allegation of marriage. As to defendant Breeding, no evidence was introduced which in the slightest degree tended to establish this essential element of the crime; indeed, no evidence at all was offered touching the question. For this reason the court should have granted the motion, made at the close of the evidence offered on behalf of the people, for the dismissal of the prosecution as to defendant Breeding.

[3] Section 269a of the Penal Code, prior to the amendment thereof in May, 1911, provided that every person who lived in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery was guilty of a misdemeanor. By act of the Legislature, approved March 21, 1911, and which became effective on May 20, 1911, the section was amended by striking out the words "open and notorious." Prior to the time this amendment went into effect, the acts with which defendants were charged constituted no offense whatever under the laws of this state. People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 83 Pac. 42, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268.

[4] One Culver was called as a witness, and, after testifying that he had a conversation with defendant Croft in August, 1910, was asked to relate what she said with reference to her and Breeding living together at that time. Defendants objected to the question, upon the ground that it was immaterial, since it had reference to the conduct and acts of the parties at a time when, conceding that they lived in a state of cohabitation and adultery, such conduct and acts constituted no offense. The court overruled the objection, stating that the evidence would be admitted "for the purpose of showing the relations that these parties had prior to that time and from that if the facts were sufficient to lead the jury to find at the time they occupied that relation they may take into account previous circumstances, but not for the purpose of establishing the crime." This statement of the court is somewhat involved, and its meaning not entirely clear. Unless the evidence was admissible as tending to establish the crime, it was immaterial and should have been excluded. Assuming that the effect of the court's ruling was to admit the evidence for all purposes, we are of the opinion that it was incompetent. Conceding that the evidence tended to show that in August, 1910, when to do so constituted no offense, defendants lived in a state of cohabitation and adultery, it constituted no proof that they were living in such state after May 20, 1911, when to do so constituted a crime. It was not a status which, proven to have been created, will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed to continue, but a relation or condition due to the acts of the parties, and which, in the absence of such acts, can have no existence. We agree with the learned trial judge that such evidence was inadmissible for the purpose of establishing the crime, and, being inadmissible for that purpose, it could not be admissible for any other purpose; hence it was error to admit it at all.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[5, 6] As used in the statute, the words "living in a state of cohabitation and adultery" means the living or dwelling together as husband and wife, and exercising the sexual rights and duties implied by such relation when legally created; in other words, a counterweight of the marriage relation. Hence, to justify the conviction of defendants, it should appear from the evidence that there existed between them an adulterous cohabitation prior to May 25, 1911, and subsequent to the date on which said amendment went into effect, namely, May 20, 1911. The only evidence touching the question as to the conduct of defendants during this period was that they resided in the same house, which consisted of a room and a kitchen downstairs and a loft or room upstairs, each of which, other than the kitchen, was used as a bedroom; that on May 24, 1911, the constable, accompanied by two other persons, went to this house about 8:30 in the evening, and after spending a half or three-quarters of an hour in watching the house, during which time they saw some person come out and re-enter the same, and after the occupants had retired, they knocked upon the door and asked for admission, in response to which, after the lapse of some minutes, the door was opened by a son of Nina B. Croft, a young man about 20 years of age, at which time the witnesses testified that they saw defendant Breeding and another son of defendant Croft in bed in the lower room of the house; that Nina B. Croft was occupying the upper room of the building; that after knocking upon the door and demanding entrance, and before the door was opened, these witnesses heard a noise within which sounded like some one coming down the stairs, which stairway consisted of a ladder or cleats nailed upon the studding, and during this period of waiting they also heard voices engaged in conversation both upstairs and downstairs; one of the voices upstairs being that of a woman. At the time defendant Croft's sons, both of whom were upwards of 20 years of age, and one of whom was married, were occupying the house with defendants. This was substantially all of the evidence offered touching the period extending from May 20 to May 25, 1911. While this and other evidence tends to establish the fact that defendants resided in the same house, nevertheless it is insufficient to show that they lived in a state of cohabitation and adultery. Indeed, it is questionable whether the evidence, when applied to the period covered by the information, even "shows opportunity."

For the reasons given, the judgment as to both defendants is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

19 Cal. App. 400

FLYNN v. MANSON et al. (Civ. 1,022.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 10, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 7, 1912.)

1. RELEASE (§ 29*)—JOINT TORT-FEASORS.

A release of one of several wrongdoers from liability releases his codefendants, though the release recites that it is not claimant's intention that it so operate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 72, 74; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. RELEASE (§ 29*)—TORTS—DOUBLE RECOVERY.

There can be but one recovery for a single tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 72, 74; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Ann Flynn against Marsden Manson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles F. Hanlon, for appellant. Lloyd S. Ackerman, for respondent United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. Stratton & Kaufman, for respondent Empire State Surety Co. John B. Gartland, for respondent Casey. Knight & Heggerty, for respondent Van der Naillen.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment. According to the allegations of the complaint the plaintiff was injured by the wrongful act of the defendants. In consideration of the sum of $250 the plaintiff released one of the defendants, reserving the right to proceed against the remaining defendants. A judgment of dismissal was entered in favor of the defendant thus released. When the cause came up for trial the court granted a motion to dismiss the action as to the remaining defendants, holding that the release of one of a number of joint tort-feasors was a discharge of all, notwithstanding the stipulation in the instrument of release to the contrary.

The facts of the case, and the decisions in this state applicable thereto, are set forth in an opinion prepared and filed by the learned judge of the trial court. As our consideration of the case leads us to the same conclusions as set forth very clearly in that opinion, we cannot do better than quote it in its entirety:

"This is an action ex delicto, brought by plaintiff against the defendants Marsden Manson, Michael Casey, and A. Van der Naillen, and other former members of the board of public works, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in consequence of the neglect of the defendants to maintain a sufficient sidewalk, in consequence of which the plaintiff was injured, and to recover damages for which injury this action was brought. Issue was joined therein, and on the 27th day of September, 1909, the defendant Marsden Manson, in consideration of the payment of the sum of $250, secured from the plaintiff a release discharging him, said Marsden Manson, from any further liability in the premises. Thereafter, in accordance with the terms of said release, a dismissal of the action was duly made and filed by plaintiff's attorney, and a judgment dismissing said Manson and his cosureties was thereupon duly entered.

"The instrument of release recited that in consideration of the above amount the plaintiff forever released said Manson 'from all claims and causes of action' set forth in the complaint herein. It, however, contained a provision to the effect that, in executing said release, it was not the intention of plaintiff that it should operate as a release of the liability of Manson's codefendants, or either of them; but, on the contrary, 'it is the plaintiff's intention that the cause of action * * * against said defendants Casey and Van der Naillen * * * shall exist and continue with the same force and effect as if this release had never been made.' The release in question was set up by supplemental plea on behalf of the defendants Casey and Van der Naillen, and a motion was thereupon made by the last-named defendants for a dismissal of the action as to them, upon the ground that the release of either codefendant was a release of all the defendants herein.

[1] "It has long been a well-settled rule of law that in an action against several wrongdoers charged with the commission of a joint tort the release of one is the release of all; but whether the far-reaching effects of such release can be modified or overcome by any reservation in the release similar to the one mentioned herein is a question upon which the authorities are undoubtedly conflicting, and the point has never been directly decided in this state. In Urton v. Price, 57 Cal. 272, an action against two tort-feasors, the plaintiff executed a release to one of them 'from all demands arising from personal injuries to me for which I brought suit,' and the court found that the release evidenced an intention to constitute a satisfaction for the injuries complained of. In the Tompkins Case, 66 Cal. 166 [4 Pac. 1165], which was an action against two railroad companies to recover damages for injuries sustained by a passenger upon the car of one of said companies, it appeared that the plaintiff executed a release of one of the defendants, and the court held that thereby both of the defendants were released. In the course of its opinion the court says: 'Every party contributing to the injuries was liable to the full extent of the damages by her [the plaintiff] sustained. Her injuries gave her but a single cause of action. * * * Damages resulting from the same wrongful transaction are ordinarily inseparable. She could not recover part from one and part from the other defendant'—quoting with approval the following language of the court in an opinion in Urton v. Price: 'The bar accrues in favor of some of the wrongdoers by reason of what has been received from * * * one or more of the others. The bar arises from the fact that the injured party has actually received satisfaction, or what in law is deemed the equivalent.'

"In the Chetwood Case, 113 Cal. 414 [45 Pac. 704], an action in its nature ex delicto was commenced against a number of defendants, three of whom constituted the executive committee of the corporation defendant. Subsequently the plaintiff released two of the defendants last named upon the payment by them to him of the sum of $27,500, and thereafter caused formal judgment of dismissal of the action as to them to be entered. Judgment had been rendered against three defendants last named for a sum of money in excess of $190,000, and it was held that the release of two of the defendants operated to release the third. 'While plaintiff may sue one or all of the joint tort-feasors, he can have but one satisfaction. Once paid for the injury he has suffered by any one of the joint tort-feasors, his right to proceed further is at an end. Where several joint tort-feasors have been sued in a single action, a retraxit of the cause of action in favor of one of them operates to release them all. By his withdrawal plaintiff announced that he has received satisfaction for the injury complained of. * * * It matters not, either, whether the payment made was in a large or in a small amount. If it be accepted in satisfaction of the cause of action against one, it is in law a satisfaction of the claim against them all. In the case at bar it is disclosed that, after the court had awarded a single judgment for a lump sum against the three defendants jointly, the plaintiff accepted from two of them a sum of money for and on account of the injury and loss sustained, and a judgment of dismissal was accordingly entered. This judgment, entered under the stipulation of the parties, was equivalent to a retraxit. * * * It undoubtedly is liable for all the damages which the plaintiff has sustained, without regard to their different degrees of culpability, and a release of one discharges all.'

[2] "It is claimed by plaintiff that these authorities are inapplicable because in none of those cases did the release contain the saving clause of the one herein. It is to be observed, however, that the release made to Manson discharged him 'from all claims and causes of action set forth in the complaint.' It furthermore provided that, in the event that such release should be held to operate as a discharge of Manson's codefendants, nevertheless it was to operate 'as a full and final release of said Manson.' However conflicting may be the current of authorities in respect to the proper construction of a release of the kind in question, it is a well-settled principle of law that in actions ex delicto plaintiff can recover compensation but once. Where the demand is unliquidated, as in the case here, the court cannot hold that the payment of any sum, however small, in consideration of a release does not or cannot operate as compensation for the alleged injuries.

"I think, in view of the broad and sweeping language of the Supreme Court in the case last quoted, it is clear that the release in question, notwithstanding its saving clauses, is a discharge, not only of Manson, but of his codefendants Casey and Van der Naillen."

In addition to the authorities referred to in the foregoing opinion, there are a number of cases in other jurisdictions, constituting the weight of authority, which hold that a reservation in a release to one of several tort-feasors does not operate to hold the others. Such a provision, says the court in Gunther v. Lee, 45 Md. 60, 24 Am. Rep. 504, "is simply void as being repugnant to the legal effect and operation of the release itself." So in Seither v. Philadelphia Trac-tion Co., 125 Pa. 397, 17 Atl. 338, 4 L. R. A. 54, 11 Am. St. Rep. 905, where a reservation in a release similar to the one here was considered, the court said that the plaintiff having received one satisfaction was not entitled to a second. Each joint tort-feasor "being liable to the extent of the injury done by all, it follows as a necessary consequence that satisfaction made by one for his liability operates as a satisfaction for the whole wrong and as a discharge of all concerned. One defendant cannot make an agreement impairing the legal rights of his codefendants, nor cede to the plaintiff the privilege these defendants had of availing themselves of any matter forming a legal defense to the action." Ellis v. Bitzer, 2 Ohio, 89, 15 Am. Dec. 534, 537. In Sunlin v. Skutt, 133 Mich. 208, 94 N. W. 733, it is held, as stated in the syllabus: "The release of one joint trespasser is the release of all, irrespective of the intention of the parties."

In the case of Ruble v. Turner, 12 Va. 38, the same principle is given thus: "The law says that if one joint trespasser be released, or make accord and satisfaction, it shall be a bar against the recovery against all others. The plaintiff can no more change the law in this particular by any subsequent proviso or condition than he could after a grant in fee simple by deed restrain his grantee from selling the lands. * * * The proviso is merely void, and cannot prevent the legal effect of the accord and satisfaction made by one of the codefendants." See, also, Ewing v. Ford, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 457, Brown v. Town of Louisburg, 126 N. C. 701, 36 S. E. 166, 78 Am. St. Rep. 677, El Paso & S. P. Co. v. Darr (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 166, Ayer v. Ashmead, 31 Conn. 447, 83 Am. Dec. 154, and the leading case of Abb v. N. P. Ry. Co., 28 Wash. 428, 68 Pac. 954, 58 L. R. A. 293, 92 Am. St. Rep. 864, where the authorities on both sides of the question are carefully reviewed, and the conclusion is reached that, when an injured party receives a sum of money with an agreement that it shall fully release and discharge the one making the payment—as was the case here—it is a release of the cause of action as to all the defendants, although there was a stipulation to the contrary. "The absolute release of one," says the court, "operates to release all tort-feasors who participated in the same act."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

19 Cal. App. 451

PARKER v. HERNDON. (Civ. 945.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, July 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied Aug. 10, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 80*)—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint stating that plaintiff, an experienced mining engineer, was employed by defendant, who owned an interest in mining claims, to report the condition of the property and assist in making sales, on an agreement for an undivided one-sixth interest in the property and the proceeds; that plaintiff performed his part of the agreement, but defendant did not convey any interest to him, and refused to pay him any part of the proceeds of sale, excepting plaintiff's expenses; that the exact amount received by defendant for property sold is unknown to plaintiff, but that on information and belief he states it to be in excess of $10,000; and that there is due and unpaid to him a sum in excess of $1,266, he being unable to state the exact amount—in the absence of demurrer, sufficiently states a cause of action for the recovery of money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 107-127; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*) — HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.

Defendant cannot complain on appeal that the complaint did not state facts entitling plaintiff to relief prayed for, but not granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075-4088; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 195*) — ACTION TO RECOVER MONEY.

An action to recover under a contract to pay plaintiff part of the proceeds of mining claims for his services cannot be said to be barred by limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 343, where it does not appear when the proceeds of a sale were received by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 711-716; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*) — REVIEW — FINDINGS.

Findings should be liberally construed to support the judgment appealed from.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3782; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*) — REVIEW — FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Joseph H. Parker against James M. Herndon. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Millsap and Millsap & Sparks, for appellant. Charles Lantz and W. J. Wood, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action begun December 4, 1908. By the amended complaint, upon which the action was tried, it was alleged that plaintiff was an experienced mining engineer; that on January 1, 1904, defendant was the owner of a one-half interest in a number of mining claims in Riverside county; that he employed plaintiff to map, photograph, and make a technical report as to the quantity and value of ore therein, and assist defendant in making sales of the property, in consideration of the performance of which service defendant agreed to give to plaintiff an undivided one-sixth of his interest in said property, and in case of a sale of any of the property to pay to plaintiff one-sixth of the gross proceeds of such sale; that plaintiff performed his part of the contract; that defendant did not convey to plaintiff any interest in the property; that he sold a number of the claims, but refused to pay to plaintiff any part of the proceeds thereof, or to pay him any sum whatever, except plaintiff's expenses incurred in the performance of the work; that the exact amount received by defendant for the property sold is unknown to plaintiff, but on information and belief alleged to be in excess of $10,000, and that there is due and unpaid to him a sum in excess of $1,266, the exact amount of which sum so due and unpaid plaintiff is unable to state. The prayer was for judgment for such an amount as might be found due plaintiff from the proceeds of the sales made by defendant, and a decree adjudging plaintiff the owner of a one-sixth interest in the property which defendant retained. By answer defendant denied the material allegations of the complaint, and in addition thereto, pleaded the statute of limitations as a bar to any recovery upon the alleged agreement. The court found the issues, in so far as they affected plaintiff's right to one-sixth of the proceeds of the property sold, in his favor, and gave him judgment therefor, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] While the complaint is inartificially drawn, and contains much matter of surplusage, it must, in the absence of demurrer, be construed as a sufficient statement of a cause of action to recover money alleged to be due upon the contract whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiff one-sixth of the proceeds of the sale of property alleged to have been sold. It also purports to state a cause of action for the specific performance of the contract as to the unsold mining claims, an interest in which defendant retained.

[2] Appellant attacks the complaint, claiming that, measured by the equitable rules applicable to cases involving specific performance, it is insufficient as a basis for the relief prayed for as to the unsold property, title to which was still vested in defendant. Conceding this to be true, a complete answer to the contention is that during the trial, in open court, plaintiff voluntarily abandoned all claim and right to the unsold portion of the property, and asked judgment only for one-sixth of the proceeds of the property sold. No demurrer being interposed, and no judgment rendered against defendant decreeing specific performance, appellant will not be heard in an attack upon the complaint based upon the ground that it did not state facts entitling plaintiff to relief prayed for, but not granted. Under such circumstances, he is in no position to complain. The case of Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 120, 60 Pac. 689, cited by appellant, was one where in an accounting was sought by plaintiff upon the theory that a copartnership existed between the parties. The court held the facts alleged insufficient to show a copartnership, or any right to the relief claimed, and hence no facts were alleged entitling plaintiff to a decree for an accounting. The case at bar, as shown by the record, is not one for an accounting, but for simple breach of contract. Plaintiff, alleging his inability, for reasons alleged, to state the exact sum due by reason thereof, asks the court to determine the same and give judgment therefor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Ahn. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indices

[3] The cause of action was not barred by the statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 343), affirmatively pleaded by defendant. He introduced no evidence in support of the allegation, but claims that plaintiff's evidence shows the services were completed prior to April 22, 1904, and the original complaint was filed December 4, 1908. The covenant of defendant, however, was not to pay plaintiff upon completion of performance of the services, but, as found by the court, "to pay to plaintiff one-sixth of the gross receipts which said defendant should receive from the sale of defendant's interest in the property." Nothing, therefore, was due from defendant to plaintiff until the sale was consummated and the purchase money paid. The record is silent as to the date when the sale was made and the purchase money in the sum of $6,499.98 paid. For aught that appears, this sum may have been paid the day before the suit was brought. Moreover, there is a conflict of testimony as to the time when plaintiff completed his contract.

It is further claimed that the finding, that defendant should pay plaintiff one-sixth of the gross proceeds of the sale of the property, is not supported by the evidence, for the reason that, in certain letters written plaintiff, who was then operating a mine in Kern county, defendant offered to give him a one-sixth interest in the property, and in response to these letters, and at the request of defendant, plaintiff came to Los Angeles, where, as he says: "We talked the proposition over, and I told him I wanted to have a thorough understanding of this thing. He said: 'Why, sure. Now I will give you just according to my letters that I have written you. I will give you all the expenses for the trip, allowing you $50 for the expenses of your family while you are gone up there, and I will give you a one-sixth interest of all that I receive on the property.' I said: 'Now, if there is any money to be paid on this, I do not care to go into it, because it is too large a deal for me to tackle. I have not got the money.' He said: 'There is no money coming from you whatever. The thing is big enough. I know what it is, and we can all clean up a fortune. I will give you one-sixth of the gross receipts if you will go down there and see that I do not get beat out of the property. I want you to go and make maps of the property, make photographs, and conscientiously sample the ore.'" Plaintiff further testified that "the major part of the work, with the exception of endeavoring to help sell the property, was all done within a few months, but I endeavored until the latter part of last year to help him sell the property."

Appellant insists that this oral agreement was void for want of other consideration than the promise on the part of plaintiff to perform a duty already imposed upon him by an acceptance of defendant's offer made by letter to give him a one-sixth interest in the property, which fact he claims was found by the court. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 187, 33 Pac. 862.

[4] If possible, findings are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 395, 35 Pac. 1005. The finding that, upon receipt of the letters, plaintiff accepted defendant's offer by letter, and left his work in Kern county, and came to Los Angeles, and there had a conversation with defendant, in which it was agreed that defendant should pay him one-sixth of the gross proceeds of the sale, rightly construed, means that in response to letters plaintiff came to Los Angeles, where an oral contract was made, as found by the court. The parol contract, not the offer made by letter, which brought the parties together, constitutes the basis for plaintiff's right to recover. This was the theory upon which the trial court gave judgment for plaintiff.

[5] Conceding a conflict in plaintiff's own testimony as to what he was to do, what he did, and when he completed his work, it was, nevertheless, for the trial court to reconcile his statements, and, unless manifestly without support, the findings made thereon should not be disturbed. Applying this rule, and recognizing the existence of such conflict, we are of the opinion that the attack upon the findings is without merit.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

19 Cal. App. 457

GOODMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et. al.
(Civ. 1,216.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. July 13, 1912.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT.

Where a justice's judgment was rendered on March 7th, and an undertaking staying execution and an undertaking on appeal were filed on March 14th, and notice of appeal was filed on April 3d, and thereafter the amount required by law to be paid for the filing of papers on appeal was paid, an order dismissing the appeal was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 550-578; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

Application for mandamus by S. B. Goodman against the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles and N. P. Conrey, one of the judges thereof. Denied.

H. C. Millsap, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The affidavit discloses that a certain judgment was rendered against petitioner, as defendant in a certain action brought in the justice's court, on the 7th day of March, 1912, for the sum of $234.60; that thereafter, on the 14th day of March, an undertaking was filed in the justice's court staying execution on said judgment, and also an undertaking on appeal; that on the 3d day of April following a notice of appeal was filed, and thereafter the amount required by law to be paid for the filing of papers on appeal was duly paid; that thereafter, on July 1st, the superior court dismissed the appeal. This application prays for a writ directing the respondents to vacate and set aside the order made and entered dismissing the appeal. We are of opinion that this writ should be denied, upon the authority of Rigby v. Superior Court, 122 Pac. 958, W. P. Jeffreys & Co. v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 193, 109 Pac. 147, and Stimpson Scale Co. v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. App. 539, 107 Pac. 1013.

Application for writ denied.

19 Cal. App. 396

WAGNER v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 1,003.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California, July 8, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1912.)

1. STREET RAILROADS (§ 117*)—COLLISIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries in a collision with a street car, plaintiff testified that he looked for and saw the car approaching which subsequently collided with his wagon, and, believing that he had ample time to cross safely, attempted to do so, but in a moment saw that the car was approaching at a speed of 30 or 35 miles an hour, and that he then whipped up his horses, endeavoring to escape a collision, but without success, he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 239-257; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error in rejecting evidence of a fact subsequently proved is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200-4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 113*)—ORDINANCES—ADMISSIBILITY.

An ordinance regulating the speed of street cars is admissible, in an action for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a car, on plaintiff proving that the ordinance was passed about two years before the accident, in the absence of any objection that it was not properly authenticated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 229-238; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 900, 901*)—BUDEN TO SHOW ERROR.

Appellant must affirmatively show the existence of error complained of, and the presumption is in favor of the correctness of the action of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3667-3669, 3670; Dec. Dig. §§ 900, 901.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by William Wagner against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Moore, and Stanley Moore, for appellant. Frank H. Gould, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff as the result of a collision between one of defendant's cars and a sand wagon driven by plaintiff. The defendant operates a street railway on Ellis street in San Francisco; and on the 26th day of January, 1907, at about 3 o'clock in the morning, as the plaintiff was driving a loaded sand wagon along Mason street in a southerly direction across Ellis street, the wagon was struck just back of the front wheels by a car operated by an employé of the defendant, which car was on the southerly track and proceeding in an easterly direction.

The theory of plaintiff's case was that the defendant ran its car at an excessive rate of speed, to wit, at the rate of 25 miles an hour, and in so careless and negligent a manner as to strike with great violence the wagon driven by plaintiff, thereby throwing him from the seat of the wagon and injuring him in the manner described in the complaint. Defendant claims that the judgment and order should be reversed on three grounds.

[1] 1. Defendant's first claim is that the evidence shows that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that therefore the court should have granted its motion for nonsuit. Plaintiff's evidence did not show that he drove upon the car tracks of the defendant without looking for approaching cars. On the contrary, he himself testified that he looked for and saw the car coming which subsequently collided with his wagon; that, where he first saw it, it was a block away, and, believing that he had ample time to cross in safety, attempted to do so, but a moment later he perceived that the car was advancing at a speed of 30 or 35 miles an hour; that he then whipped up his horses in an endeavor as best he could to escape a collision, but without success. The reasonableness of the plaintiff's belief that he had time to cross its tracks in safety was, under the circumstances, a question to be considered by the jury; and, since there was evidence to sustain the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint, the motion for nonsuit was therefore properly denied.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] 2. It is next claimed by the defendant that the judgment and order should be reversed for the alleged error of the court in excluding testimony of the length of the run of the car, the mileage, and the schedule time allowed to make that run, as evidence showing the speed of the car. The defendant offered to prove by one of its witnesses that the mileage of the Ellis street run was $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles, that the schedule time for making this distance was one hour, and that on this occasion the car was within two blocks of the terminus of the run, and was on time. This offer was rejected. The avowed purpose of the proffered evidence was to afford an inference that the car, at and just prior to the accident, was not being operated at an illegal and unreasonable rate of speed; but, as the witness on the stand at the time this offer was made had himself just testified directly to the same effect—as also did others—we do not think that it can be claimed that the court's action in rejecting this testimony caused the defendant any such substantial injury as to warrant the granting of a new trial.

[3] 3. The third ground urged for the reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in admitting in evidence an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco regulating the operation of street railway cars, without proof of its authenticity, and without proof that it was in force at the time of the accident. In that connection the record shows the following to have occurred:

"Mr. Gould—I offer in evidence the ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco numbered 1674, approved November 29, 1905, entitled 'An ordinance regulating the operation of street railway cars, limiting their speed, and providing for the character of their brakes, and fixing penalties for the violation thereof.'

"Mr. Moore—That is objected to as being incomplete and unintelligible, as not being within the pleadings or the amendment, and as no proper foundation has been laid for the same, and it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial."

By said ordinance it was declared unlawful for any person or corporation to operate street railway cars at a greater speed than 10 miles per hour within a portion of the city and county of San Francisco, including the scene of the accident.

[4] If the ordinance was not properly authenticated, and the defendant cared to take advantage of such omission, it was incumbent on it to make the record disclose that circumstance. The presumption is in favor of the action of the court; and where, as here, "the record does not show upon what it is based and all the circumstances in regard to it, it will be presumed to have been regular and correct." 2 Haynes on New Trial and Appeal (Revised Edition) 285. The burden is upon appellant to affirmatively show the existence of error. Niles v. Gonzalez, 155 Cal. 359, 100 Pac. 1080; Escondido H. S. Dist., etc., v. Escondido, etc., 130 Cal. 128, 62 Pac. 401; O'Callaghan v. Bode, 84 Cal. 489, 497, 24 Pac. 269; Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133; Nims v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 110; 3 Cyc. 300, 301; Blethen v. Bonner (Tex. Civ. App.) 52 S. W. 571; Thorn v. Kemp, 98 Ala. 417, 13 South. 749. The plaintiff proved that the ordinance was passed in the year 1905, and the presumption is that it is in force until the contrary is shown. St. Louis, A. & T. H. Ry. Co. v. Eggman, 161 Ill. 155, 43 N. E. 620; People v. Addison, 10 Cal. 1; White v. White, 82 Cal. 438, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; Bush v. Garner, 73 Ala. 162; Graham v. Williams, 21 La. Ann. 594.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

19 Cal. App. 423

L. SCATENA & CO. v. VAN LOBEN SELS.
(Civ. 985.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 12, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 425*) — OFFICERS — CONTRACTS.

Where the president and manager of a corporation, with authority to contract for the consignment of produce, contracted for the allowance of a rebate on commissions charged by the corporation for the selling of produce consigned to it by the other party to the contract, and the corporation for several years paid the rebate, the corporation was estopped from asserting that its officer had no authority to make the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1697–1701, 1705; Dec. Dig. § 425.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 28*) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that a contract binding a corporation to pay a rebate on commissions charged for the selling of produce consigned to it was not made on the condition that the rebate should be allowed only in case the adverse party should consign all his produce to the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 133–140, 1755, 1782–1784; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

3. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 36*) — UNMATURED CLAIMS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437, 438, authorizing a defendant in an action on a contract to plead by way of counterclaim any other cause of action arising on contract and existing at the commencement of the action, rebates on commissions charged for the sale of produce not due are not available as a counterclaim in an action on contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. §§ 65–69; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. PLEADING (§§ 167, 384*) — ISSUES — EVIDENCE.

The allegations of an answer setting up a counterclaim are deemed denied, and plaintiff may not only introduce evidence in denial of its allegations, but may also prove affirmative matter as a defense to the counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 329, 1296-1298; Dec. Dig. §§ 167, 384.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 397*) — FINDINGS—AFFIRMATIVE MATTER—EVIDENCE.

The court need not make any finding on any affirmative matter as a defense to a counterclaim, unless it is a defense and is supported by evidence; and evidence not proving an affirmative defense does not call for a special finding as to the matter proved by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 940-945; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 28*) — EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where defendant in an action on a contract set up a counterclaim for rebates on commissions charged for the sale of produce, letters written by him after the rebates had been earned, which concerned only demands of plaintiff against defendant, and which did not mention any claim of defendant for rebates, were admissible to show that a contract for rebates did not exist, but did not prove any affirmative defense to the counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 133-140, 1755, 1782-1784; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by L. Scatena & Co., a corporation, against P. J. Van Loben Sels. From an order denying a new trial, and from the part of the judgment allowing a counterclaim of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Fred L. Dreher, for appellant. McKee & Tasheira, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order denying its motion for a new trial and from such portion of the judgment as allows the counterclaim of defendant. Plaintiff filed its complaint against defendant upon two causes of action, one upon a promissory note for $1,000, interest, and attorney's fees, and the other for $542.09 for goods sold and delivered. Defendant, by way of counterclaim, set up a claim to recover of plaintiff one-half of certain commissions charged and retained by plaintiff for the selling of certain farm produce consigned to plaintiff by defendant during the years 1906, 1907, and 1908, under an agreement, as it is alleged, whereby plaintiff promised to repay to defendant at the end of each year one-half the commissions charged by it for the selling of such produce as should be consigned to it for sale by defendant during the year. The court found in favor of defendant upon his counterclaim, and allowed the amount thereof as a credit or offset against the claim of plaintiff against the defendant. It is this action of the court that is complained of in this appeal.

[1] I. The first ground urged for a reversal is that the evidence does not show that the agreement for a rebate of commission was the contract of plaintiff. Whatever agreement defendant had with plaintiff for the allowance of a rebate on commission was made by him with L. Scatena, the president, manager, and agent of plaintiff. The evidence shows that plaintiff had an agreement with the other firms engaged in handling farm produce on commission that all the commission firms should charge a uniform rate of commission. Plaintiff, in its brief, does not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to show that L. Scatena had either actual or ostensible authority to make contracts for the consignment of produce to plaintiff, but claims that, because this particular contract allowed to defendant a rebate on such commissions, such contract was not within the scope of the agency of its manager, and therefore did not bind the plaintiff. This contention, we think, puts too narrow a limitation upon the authority of the agent. He had authority to contract for the consignment of produce, and necessarily to agree to the terms upon which consignments would be received. The subject-matter of the contract was clearly within the scope of his agency, and it does not lie in the mouth of the plaintiff, who has received and accepted the benefit of such contract, to say that its general manager and agent had no authority to agree to the terms of the contract. Besides, the contract for a rebate was first entered into in 1902, or before such date, and it is perfectly established by the evidence that the agreed rebates were allowed and paid to defendant each year thereafter until 1906. The court was justified in holding that the contract proved was the contract of plaintiff.

[2] II. It is next urged that the contract proved was to the effect that the rebate should be allowed only in case defendant should consign all his produce to plaintiff, or at least that he should consign more than he had previously consigned, and that there is no evidence that he had complied with such condition. As before stated, the contract for the allowance of a rebate on commissions was first entered into in 1902, or before such date. In the conversation at that time between Mr. L. Scatena and defendant, language was used that justified the contention of plaintiff that the agreement was for a rebate if defendant would consign all or more of his produce to plaintiff. But in practice the rebate was paid at the end of each year thereafter until 1906, without question as to whether more or all of defendant's produce had been consigned to plaintiff. Such had been the practical construction put upon the agreement by the parties in interest. In a general way an agreement for a rebate was entered into at the beginning of each year.

The evidence particularly shows the entering into the agreement at the beginning of 1906. The language testified to is somewhat vague, and while it shows an agreement for a rebate of one-half the commission, to be paid at the end of the year, there was no reference to the quantity of produce that should be shipped.

The whole evidence shows that there was a keen competition among commission men to obtain consignments, that defendant was a large grower of such produce, and that plaintiff was anxious each year to obtain his consignments. The circumstances, as disclosed by the evidence, were such as to justify the court in believing that, when the parties in 1906 agreed to the payment of a rebate on commissions for consignments, they had in mind the practice that had been in fact followed for the preceding years rather than the language that had been used when the agreement for a rebate was first made. The payment of a rebate was agreed to by plaintiff as an inducement to defendant, a large grower of produce, to consign to plaintiff, and it was not a condition precedent to the payment of such rebate that defendant should consign all or any particular proportion of such produce to plaintiff. Such, at least, is the conclusion justified by the circumstances in evidence concerning the making of the agreement. It is the interpretation put upon the agreement by the trial court; and, as it is fairly supported by the evidence, we cannot disturb either the findings or the judgment for this reason.

[3] III. It is next urged that the matter set forth in the defendant's answer does not constitute a counterclaim, because it was not a "cause of action arising upon a contract and existing at the time of the commencement of the action." In part this contention must be sustained. A defendant, "in an action upon a contract," may plead, by way of counterclaim, "any other cause of action arising also upon contract and existing at the commencement of the action." Sections 437 and 438, Code Civ. Proc. This action was commenced on the 13th day of August, 1908. The rebate for commissions on consignments for the year 1908 was not payable to defendant until the end of said year. This appears both by the allegations of defendant's counterclaim and the findings of the court. No cause of action existed for the recovery by defendant of any rebate on commissions on consignments for the year 1908 when the action was commenced. The amount the court found and allowed as a rebate on commissions for 1908 is the sum of $44.18, and the judgment should be modified by adding such amount to the judgment as of the date of the entry thereof.

[4] IV. It is next urged that the court failed to find upon a material issue raised by the evidence to the counterclaim. Under our practice, no replication is required to an answer or to a counterclaim set up in the answer. Its allegations are deemed denied, and the plaintiff may not only introduce evidence in denial of its allegations, but may also prove affirmative matter as a defense to such counterclaim. In the case at bar the court found in favor of defendant upon the allegations of his counterclaim.

[5] Appellant claims that evidence was introduced tending to show that defendant waived or abandoned his counterclaim before this action was brought, and that the failure of the court to find upon the issue thus raised is an error of law requiring a reversal of the judgment and a new trial. If we concede, for the purposes of this decision that it is necessary for the court to find upon an issue thus raised, we still do not think the court erred in failing to make the finding contended for. It certainly is not required of the court to make any finding upon any affirmative matter, unless it constitutes a defense to the counterclaim and is supported by some evidence.

[6] In this case the appellant points to four certain letters written by defendant to plaintiff, which he claims show a waiver or abandonment of any claim for the rebate set up in the counterclaim. These letters were written after the rebate had been earned that we have in this opinion allowed. When they were written the obligation to pay such rebates had been fully incurred. There is nothing in them that can possibly be construed as amounting to a release or discharge of the obligation to pay such rebates. There is nothing in them that tends to show an accord and satisfaction, nor an estoppel against defendant. They are simply letters written to plaintiff by defendant concerning the demands of plaintiff against defendant, in which no mention is made of any claim of defendant against plaintiff for the rebate set up in his counterclaim. They resulted in no settlement of the matter in controversy between plaintiff and defendant, nor in any action to the prejudice of plaintiff. They were admissible as evidentiary matter tending to show that no contract for rebates had ever existed, and as such were doubtless considered by the court; but they do not tend to prove any affirmative defense to the counterclaim. No finding was required upon any matter raised by the evidence presented by these letters other than such as was made upon the affirmative issues presented by defendant's counterclaim. Evidence that does not tend to prove an affirmative defense to a counterclaim does not call for a special finding as to the matter proved by such evidence.

Complaint is also made by appellant as to the admission of certain evidence over appellant's objection. The evidence admitted over appellant's objection was unimportant and, if the court committed a technical error in its ruling, it was of too trifling a character to require a new trial.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed. The judgment is modified, by substituting the sum of $1,128.19 for the sum of $1,084.01, thus increasing the amount awarded to plaintiff by the sum of $44.18 as of the date of the entry of the judgment, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

163 Cal. 587

CITY PROPERTIES CO. et al. v. JORDAN,
Secretary of State. (S. F. 6,306.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 23, 1912.)

COMMERCE (§ 69*)—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 230*)—FILING OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—FILING FEE—LICENSE TAX—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

The refusal of the Secretary of State to accept for filing articles of incorporation of a domestic corporation, organized to guarantee mortgages on real estate in various states, without payment of the filing fee and license tax contemplated by Pol. Code, § 416, and Civ. Code, § 409, is not violative of the federal Constitution, as interfering with interstate commerce, and as denying to the corporation the equal protection of the laws, since the corporation may not become a legal entity without the filing of the articles, and since the state may grant a franchise to be a corporation on such terms as it sees fit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. §§ 113-118; Dec. Dig. § 69; * Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 687; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

In Bank. Petition for a writ of mandamus by the City Properties Company, a de facto corporation, and others, as incorporators and directors thereof, against F. C. Jordan, Secretary of State, to compel the acceptance for filing of articles of incorporation. Denied.

Arthur Crane, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. This original petition for writ of mandate, directed to F. C. Jordan, as Secretary of State of California, sets forth that the petitioners, as incorporators, had filed articles of incorporation of the City Properties Company with the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, that the amount of the capital stock of the corporation was $4,000,000, divided into 40,000 shares, of $100 each, and that the amount subscribed was 3 shares, of $100 each—1 share each by the three incorporators, petitioners herein. The purposes for which the corporation was to be organized are multifarious. Its capital was to be divided and placed in different cities of the United States for the purpose of guaranteeing mortgages on real property in such states. It was to own and hold real estate in such cities, to own and hold stock of other corporations, to issue bonds and deal in stocks and bonds, to invest in lands in the states of the United States, and it was to buy and sell and otherwise deal with and in all forms of personal property. These articles of incorporation were presented for filing to the Secretary of State, who refused to accept them for this purpose without the payment of the filing fee and license tax contemplated by law. Pol. Code, § 416; Civ. Code, § 409.

Petitioners conceive and allege "that the said taxes so sought to be imposed as a condition precedent to the filing of said articles of incorporation would constitute a burden upon interstate commerce, a tax upon property situated outside of the state of California, a discrimination against your petitioning corporation, and a refusal to allow your said petitioner equal protection of the laws; and said taxes, and both items thereof, as your petitioners are advised and believe, are sought to be imposed by the respondent in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States." They, however, fail to perceive that their embryonic corporation, until it has acquired vitality and has become a legal entity, by obtaining from the sovereign power a right to exist as a corporation, is not only without substance, but without shadow. They fail further to perceive that the sovereign power may grant or refuse to grant a franchise to be a corporation upon such terms as it sees fit. If those proposing to incorporate do not like the terms, they need not incorporate. Nothing in the law prevents these petitioners as individuals from engaging in interstate or any other kind of commerce; but if they seek to create a new legal entity—a person and a citizen within the meaning of the Constitution—for the purpose of engaging in business, and ask the state of California to give life to this creation, it will be done, and done only, upon such terms as the state may prescribe. The pretension that the exaction of the filing fee "would constitute a burden upon interstate commerce" upon the part of a corporation which has no existence, which cannot exist until the state of California permits it, and which, if it existed, might never engage in interstate commerce, cannot be said to present any legal question.

The application for mandate is therefore denied.

163 Cal. 561

EDWARD BARRON ESTATE CO. v.
WOODRUFF CO. et al. (S. F. 5,528.)(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1912.)

1. FRAUD (§ 25*)—CONTINUING DECEIT—EXECUTORY AND EXECUTED CONTRACTS.

While deceit, merely inducing one to make an executory contract, may not be complained of, if nothing is done under the contract, so that there is no damage, yet if the deceit does not end in the making of the contract but further influences a party to the contract in his conduct under it, it is a continuing deceit, of which such party, injured by the execution or partial execution of the contract, may complain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

2. FRAUD (§ 25*)—CONTINUING DECEIT.

The effect of defendant's misrepresentations, inducing plaintiff to make a contract employing defendant to make plans and specifications for a building, buy the materials, employ the help, and supervise the construction, that he had great architectural and structural knowledge and skill, when he had none, and that the maximum cost of the building such as plaintiff desired to erect would not exceed $300,000, did not cease on the making of the contract, but continued during the execution thereof, as regards the right to recover for the deceit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

3. FRAUD (§ 11*)—STATEMENT OF OPINION.

An action for deceit can be founded on a mere expression of opinion, where it is made, not as an honest expression of opinion, but dishonestly, with knowledge on the part of the one making it of its falsity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. FRAUD (§ 11*)—REPRESENTATION OF FACT.

The statement of one, representing himself as an architect of great skill and knowledge, that the maximum cost of the building such as plaintiff desired to erect would not exceed $300,000, is a representation of a fact, and not a mere expression of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. FRAUD (§ 22*)—RIGHT TO RELY ON REPRESENTATIONS.

Plaintiff, having employed defendant as architect and supervisor of construction of a building on his fraudulent representations that he had great knowledge and skill in such matters, and that the maximum cost of the building such as plaintiff desired to erect would not exceed a certain sum, had thereafter a right to rely on such representations, oft repeated after the making of the contract, and so was not guilty of such carelessness as to bar his right to recover for the deceit, because not exercising means of ascertaining that the representations were untrue and insisting on defendant presenting complete plans, specifications, and detailed estimates, as he had represented he would.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-23; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

6. FRAUD (§ 32*)—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Plaintiff, having employed defendant as architect and superintendent of construction of a building on his false and fraudulent representations, repeated after the employment, that the cost of the building would not exceed a certain amount, could, on discovering the fraud when the building was partly completed, repudiate defendant, complete the building itself, and sue for the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

7. FRAUD (§ 59*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Plaintiff, having employed defendant as architect and superintendent of construction of a building on his fraudulent representation that its cost would not exceed a certain amount, on which sum alone a fair return by way of rental can be obtained, can recover as damages the commissions paid and the excess of cost.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 60-62, 64; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Edward Barron Estate Company against the Woodruff Company and another. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Charles S. Wheeler, J. C. McKinstry, and Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to recover damages for fraud and deceit. To the complaint a demurrer, general and special, was interposed. The demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff declined to amend, and from the judgment which followed prosecutes this appeal.

The sufficiency of the complaint to pass a general demurrer is the matter to which the chief arguments upon either side have been addressed. The allegations and charges in the complaint may be thus epitomized:

Plaintiff is a family corporation, organized to manage the properties of Edward Barron, deceased. Its stockholders are the heirs of the deceased, and none of its officers or stockholders has had any business experience or skill, and, in particular, are they without knowledge or skill in the profession of architecture and in the art of constructing buildings. Plaintiff owned a piece of land on Geary and Taylor streets in San Francisco. The improvements on this land were destroyed by the fire of April, 1906. Thereafter plaintiff desired to erect upon its land a building of a character that would return by way of rental a fair interest upon the value of the land and the building to be constructed thereon. The value of the land was $300,000. Plaintiff was advised that if a reinforced concrete and tile hotel building of six stories, or six stories with a mezzanine floor, could be erected on the land, at a cost not to exceed $300,000, the premises could be rented and a fair return received therefrom. In particular, one De Wolfe, a man of good financial standing, would accept a lease of the land with such a building thereon at a rental sum equal to 8 per cent. per annum upon the value of the land and the total cost of the building. These facts became known to S. H. Woodruff (defendant herein), who is the sole owner of the stock of the Woodruff Company (defendant herein), a corporation; Woodruff's business operations being conducted under the designation of the Woodruff Company. S. H. Woodruff, it is charged, made all the representations on behalf of the Woodruff Company, so that hereafter in this statement and in the discussion upon it S. H. Woodruff's name may alone be used. S. H. Woodruff represented that he was an architect and designer of great skill and experience; that he had designed and constructed many buildings in Eastern cities. Pictures and plans of certain buildings were exhibited to plaintiff by Woodruff, and it was stated as a fact that Woodruff had as architect designed the buildings shown in the pictures and detailed on the plans.

It is charged that, in truth, Woodruff was not an architect of skill or ability, was not qualified to act as an architect, and had never designed or planned the buildings of which the plans, diagrams, and representations had been shown to plaintiff. All these and other representations hereinafter to be referred to it is charged were falsely made by defendant, with the purpose and object of inducing plaintiff to employ the defendants to erect its hotel building for a commission of 15 per cent. of the moneys to be expended by plaintiff in its construction. And to like effect it is charged that certain promises, hereinafter to be adverted to, were made by defendants without any intention of performance upon their part, and as a part of the same scheme to induce plaintiff to entrust the construction of its hotel building to defendants. Further, in this connection, it is charged that the defendants positively asserted, stated, and represented to the plaintiff as a fact that the maximum cost of constructing such a building as the plaintiff then desired to erect, including all commissions to the defendant the Woodruff Company, would not exceed the sum of $300,000; that the building would be complete and suitable and strictly first-class in every particular; that in all probability the actual cost of the building would be much less than the sum of $300,000; that the defendants would be safe in saying it would only cost $285,000, but to allow for all contingencies they would fix the outside cost at $300,000; that the defendants could not state how much less the cost would be until plans and specifications were prepared, but in no event would the cost exceed the sum of $300,000; that this fact could be definitely stated by the defendants without first obtaining plans and specifications and they did definitely state it, and so assured plaintiff. Further, the defendants stated that if the plaintiff would sign a written contract, which was afterwards signed, the defendants would without delay prepare full and complete plans and specifications of the kind provided for in the contract, and would thereupon forthwith make an actual detailed estimate of the cost of the proposed building, if constructed as planned, "the estimate to be accurate to the last nail thereof"; that plaintiff could then see for itself that defendants' statements were true as to the maximum cost of the building. Defendants further represented that, if the actual cost of the building should by any chance exceed the estimate of $300,000, the defendants could and would, and their experience would enable them to, so change or modify the plans and specifications as to construct the building of the character which plaintiff desired, and that such building could surely and certainly be constructed for a sum not to exceed $300,000.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is charged that these statements and representations, in so far as they were statements and representations of fact, were false and untrue, and in so far as they were statements of defendants' opinion they were not statements of a true opinion held by defendants or either of them, but were designedly false and misleading statements and representations and opinions not actually held by defendants, or either of them, but were falsely asserted to be held by them for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into the contract and to expend moneys for the construction of the building, from which expenditure the defendants would derive the named commission; that so far from believing that such a building could be constructed for the sum of $300,000, the defendants were of a contrary opinion at the time of making such statements, representations, and expressions of opinion, and believed and knew that the cost of a building of the kind and character referred to would be far in excess of $300,000. Plaintiff, relying upon the statements of fact, expressions of opinion, and false promises so made by defendants, on the 22d day of September, 1906, entered into a written agreement with the defendant the Woodruff Company, whereby in effect the Woodruff Company was employed as architect, engineer, and contractor to erect the hotel building for a 15 per cent. commission on the moneys which plaintiff might expend in its construction; but prior to the date when plaintiff was thus induced to enter into this contract, defendants had employed skilled experts to estimate the cost of constructing the building and had been informed by them that the cost would far exceed the sum of $300,000. The defendants believed the truth of these statements and the correctness of the opinion so given to them by their own experts, but, nevertheless, they willfully and falsely and fraudulently, and with the intent and design of involving plaintiff in the expenditure of moneys as aforesaid, concealed this knowledge and made the false representations, expressions, and promises above set forth.

The only provisions of the written contract, which was thus entered into, necessary here to mention, are the following: The Woodruff Company agreed to furnish plans and specifications for a six-story (or six-story and mezzanine story, as required by the owner) reinforced concrete and tile hotel building, such plans to be made under the direction and according to the requirements of the Barron Estate Company. It further agreed to supervise the work of construction, to purchase all necessary material, employ all necessary labor, and incur all other cost necessary, to complete the work according to the plans and specifications and any changes therein, and to furnish to the Barron Estate Company a weekly statement of all material ordered and delivered upon the work, of all labor employed, and every other reasonable statement in connection with the work. The Barron Estate Company agreed to pay the Woodruff Company an amount equal to 15 per cent. of the total cost of the work, together with any changes therein, this commission to be computed on the total of each weekly statement of cost, and also to pay weekly the money to carry on the work. The plans and specifications in the contract referred to were to be identified by the signatures of both parties thereto. It is to be noted that this written contract contains no word to indicate the maximum cost of the building.

After the contract was made, the defendants, again representing that the hotel building could be constructed within the limit of $300,000, further represented that it was advisable and necessary to allow defendants to proceed under the building contract with the clearing of the land and the ordering of such material as was essential for the construction of the building thereon, without waiting for the preparation of detailed plans and specifications; and, inasmuch as the plans and specifications, when prepared, would merely show how much less than $300,000 the building would cost, it would be safe in permitting the defendants to proceed immediately under the contract before preparing the plans and specifications; that defendants would in no event incur any expense or do any work in advance of the detailed plans and specifications and accurate estimate, other than such as would be absolutely required, whatever plans and specifications were finally adopted. Upon these and other representations of defendants plaintiff relied, and so allowed and sanctioned the defendants to proceed under the contract, and gave its consent to the commencement of the building. It is charged that in October, 1906, plaintiff exercised its option to have a mezzanine floor, and so informed defendant. Defendants thereupon stated that the mezzanine floor would increase the cost of the building, but that the added cost could not by any possibility exceed the sum of $50,000, so that the total cost of the building could not by any possibility exceed $350,000. De Wolfe, the prospective tenant, agreeing to pay a rental, including interest, upon this increased cost, the mezzanine floor was ordered under these representations of defendant. Defendants then prepared working plans and drawings of the exterior of the building, including the mezzanine floor, and again represented that the building, if constructed and completed in accordance with the plans and drawings, would not exceed the sum of $350,000, and further said that the defendants were preparing detailed plans and specifications, from which a most accurate estimate of the cost could be made, but that in no event would the cost exceed $350,000. Again, later, on February 4, 1907, while the building was in process of construction, the defendants stated and represented to plaintiff and to De Wolfe that, owing to certain changes and alterations requested by De Wolfe, it would cost $400,000 to build the hotel, unless De Wolfe would modify his request for the changes; that as a matter of fact the changes requested were unnecessary for the proper construction of the building, but that with such changes and alterations requested the building could and would be constructed at an outside cost of $400,000. Plaintiff and De Wolfe, in reliance upon these representations, amended their agreement, and De Wolfe agreed with plaintiff to eliminate from his contract with it the limit cost therein specified, or, in other words, to pay a rental upon an estimated cost of $400,000.

It is charged that all these statements were untrue, were at the time they were made by defendants known by them and by each of them to be untrue, and that they knew the fact to be that, irrespective of the changes requested by De Wolfe, the actual cost of the building would exceed $600,000. Plaintiff, however, was entirely ignorant of these facts, and believed in and relied upon the statements and representations of the defendants; that all these representations and statements were so made to induce plaintiff to continue to expend money upon the building far in excess of the sum of $300,000, and subsequently $400,000, which they were willing and expected to pay, and so to enable the Woodruff Company to receive its commissions of 15 per cent. upon this enhanced and excessive cost. The Woodruff Company proceeded with the construction of the building and plaintiff continued to make weekly payments until September, 1907. Prior to this date the Woodruff Company had received from plaintiff weekly payments aggregating over $350,000. When the payments had reached this sum, plaintiff expressed to the defendants the fear that the building would cost more than $400,000, to complete; whereupon defendants, to allay plaintiff's fears and to lull them into false security, stated that plaintiff would be entitled to receive large credit on account of moneys already expended in extra material ordered by the Woodruff Company, which extra material would not be required in the building. These statements and representations were false, and were known to defendants to be false at the time of their making. About the middle of October, 1907, in response to repeated demands of plaintiff for an estimate of how much less than $400,000 the building would cost, defendants for the first time informed plaintiff that the cost of the building would exceed $400,000, and that the building when completed would cost $510,000. Thereupon plaintiff stopped work on the building, employed competent and honest experts to make an estimate of the cost of finishing the building, and was by these experts informed that the building completed in a reasonable and proper manner would cost a total sum of not less than $700,000.

Plaintiff did not discover the falsity of any of the various statements, representations, promises, and expressions of opinion made by defendants until after the defendants had made an oral statement that the total cost of the building when completed would be $510,000, and at which time plaintiff had already expended $460,000 in the construction of the building, and to complete the building would be compelled to expend $230,000 additional. When completed, the total value of the land and building would not exceed $700,000, while the total cost of the improvements alone would equal, if it did not exceed, $700,000. Of the $460,000 so paid out by plaintiff, by reason of the deceit practiced by defendants upon plaintiff, $70,000 was received by the defendants as commissions. The services of the defendants, for which plaintiff was induced to pay $70,000, were of no value to plaintiff whatsoever. De Wolfe refused to accept a lease of the land and to pay interest on the actual cost of the building, and no other person will take a lease of the land and pay the plaintiff as rental a sum which will give a reasonable interest upon the value of the land and reasonable interest upon the actual cost of the improvements which, by reason of defendants' deceit, plaintiff was induced and forced to make. Plaintiff has, by reason of its reliance upon the deliberate false representations, promises and statements, and opinions made by defendants, suffered detriment and damage in the sum of $300,000, for which it asks judgment.

[1] Logically, the consideration of the case thus presented divides itself into two separate, but intimately related, phases—the first, the deceit practiced in inducing plaintiff to enter into the contract; the second, the continuing influence and effect of that deceit, taken with the subsequent false representations, and the legal consequences which flow therefrom in the performance of the contract. It is fundamental, of course, that, no matter what the nature of the fraud or deceit, unless detriment has been occasioned thereby, plaintiff has no cause of action. Therefore it is but a truism to say that if one party by fraud has been induced to enter into a contract executory as to both parties, and nothing whatsoever is done under that contract, he has ordinarily suffered no injury therefrom. This contract was, of course, wholly executory. But, upon the other hand, in a contract such as this, it may not be said that the deceit which has induced the making of an executory contract is merged and ends in the contract itself. If the deceit does not end in the making of the contract, but still further influences a party to the contract in his conduct under it, it is obviously a deceit of a continuous nature, of which the injured party may justly complain.

To use a simple illustration: If A. has in contemplation the purchase of property which he is told is valuable for mining purposes, and will buy or refuse to buy upon the opinion and report of a mining expert in whom he has confidence, and B. represents to A. and prevails upon A. to believe that he has rare skill and experience as such mining expert, when in fact he has none, and their negotiations end in a written contract wherein B. is to inspect and investigate the property and report his opinion as to its value for mining purposes, and the transaction there ends, A. has sustained no substantial injury. The deceit of B. has but induced the making of an executory contract never executed. But if B., in pursuance of this contract, does make a favorable report upon the property, upon the assurance of which A. purchases it, and it proves to be worthless, no one, we think, will question but that B.'s deceit in securing the employment is a continuous deceit, operating to render him liable for the loss which A. has sustained. And this, regardless of the fact whether the opinion upon the value of the property which he gives to A. is honest or not. His deceit lies back of the report, and is based upon his false representation of the possession of special skill and knowledge qualifying him to make such a report.

So in this consideration the contract, though executory, having been in part at least executed, the deceit of defendants in procuring the making of the contract and the placing of themselves in a position to reap advantage therefrom is a deceit which runs concurrently with the execution, and contaminates from beginning to end their dealings with plaintiff. It will not do, therefore, to say that up to the time the contract was entered into plaintiff and defendants were dealing at arm's length. True, they were; but it is equally true that but for the representations made, opinions expressed, and promises given the contract would not have been entered into, and, having been entered into, plaintiff was absolutely justified in a continued reliance upon them until charged in some manner with knowledge of the falsity of one or another of them.

[2] The four alleged misrepresentations and falsifications leading up to and inducing the making of the contract are: (1) The representation of S. H. Woodruff's great architectural and structural knowledge and skill, when in truth and in fact he possessed none; (2) the positive assertion as a fact, or as an expression of opinion, that the maximum cost of the building such as plaintiff desired to erect would not exceed $300,000; (3) the representation that, if plaintiff would sign the contract, the defendants would without delay prepare full and complete plans and specifications of the kind provided for in the contract, and would forthwith make an actual detailed estimate of the cost, such estimate "to be accurate to the last nail thereof"; (4) the representation that if such estimate exceeded $300,000, by the exercise of their knowledge and skill, defendants could and would change and modify the plans and specifications, so as to reduce the cost of the building to a sum not to exceed $300,000.

Manifestly the effect of the first of these declarations did not and could not die with the execution of the written contract. Plaintiff employed defendants because of the false representations of the special skill and knowledge of S. H. Woodruff, and not only executed the contract because of its belief in his possession of such special skill and knowledge, but, beyond peradventure, it was, during the period of the execution of the contract, justified in relying upon this representation touching Woodruff's special skill and ability.

[3] The second representation, whether regarded as a representation of fact or as an expression of opinion, was also and obviously of continuous influence and effect. It is, of course, generally speaking, true that an action for deceit cannot be founded upon the mere expression of an opinion. But the qualifications and modifications of this general rule are as important as the rule itself. Those qualifications and modifications are numerous. It is unnecessary to attempt to illustrate them all. But, bearing in mind that an expression of an opinion, if honestly made, is an expression of what the speaker believes to be a fact, it becomes apparent that, by the expression of a dishonest opinion to one entitled to rely upon it, deceit is practiced, injury may be worked, and an action will lie. Thus the opinion of an expert employed to report upon a mine would be but the expression of his judgment, and if honestly, though mistakenly, made, of course, no injury cognizable in law, equity, or good morals could result. But instantly that the expert expresses a dishonest opinion, though it still be but an opinion, he has made himself liable in an action for deceit. Again, as pointed out by Pomeroy (2 Pom. Eq. [3d Ed.] § 878): "Wherever a party states a matter which might otherwise be only an opinion, and does not state it as the mere expression of his own opinion, but affirms it as an existing fact material to the transaction, so that the other party may reasonably treat it as a fact, and rely and act upon it as such, then the statement clearly becomes an affirmation of fact within the meaning of the general rule, and may be a fraudulent misrepresentation."

These two illustrations of instances in which expressions of opinion may be made the basis of an action for deceit are sufficient for the purposes of this consideration. If for them support by authority be considered necessary, it will be found in our own state in such cases as Crandall v. Parks, 152 Cal. 776, 93 Pac. 1018, where Prof. Pomeroy's language is quoted with approval, and in such other cases as Hedin v. M. M. & S. Institute, 62 Minn. 146, 64 N. W. 158, 35 L. R. A. 417, 54 Am. St. Rep. 628, People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y. 576, 47 N. E. 887, Watson v.

People, 87 N. Y. 561, 41 Am. Rep. 397, Simar v. Canady, 53 N. Y. 298, 13 Am. Rep. 523, Hickey v. Morrell, 102 N. Y. 454, 7 N. E. 321, 55 Am. Rep. 824, and Schumaker v. Mather, 133 N. Y. 590, 30 N. E. 755. Therefore, touching the second of these alleged false misrepresentations, it is legally a matter of indifference under the pleading whether it be considered the expression of an opinion or the representation of a fact. If the former, then the complaint shows that it was not the expression of an honest opinion, but was dishonestly made with knowledge upon the part of the defendants of its falsity. If the latter, then it was a declaration of a fact which not only was not true, but which defendants, it is charged, knew to be untrue. Treated, then, either as an expression of opinion or as a representation of fact, its influence in inducing plaintiff to employ defendants cannot be denied.

[4] It is, perhaps, however, proper to add for the guidance of the trial court that we think the language thus charged to have been uttered by defendants imports the declaration of a fact, rather than the expression of an opinion. For, while it is true, as is argued on behalf of respondents, that, because of the fact that the plans and specifications had not been settled upon and agreed to, it was an impossibility for any human being to state in terms of dollars and cents what the exact cost of the building would be, and that therefore the language at the most could be but an expression of defendants' opinion, the answer is that, in this day of architectural skill and business knowledge of construction in connection therewith, any competent architect, while not able to give in advance of accepted bids a dollar and cent estimate of the cost of a building, can name as matter of fact a figure beyond which the cost will not go. Such a statement is a statement of fact, and it is such a statement that defendants are charged with having made.

The third representation requires here no consideration. It is sufficient to say that it is charged that the complete plans and specifications were never presented to plaintiff. Whether defendants were justified in their failure so to do is a subject of later consideration. The fourth representation is manifestly connected with and dependent upon the third, and for the reasons given requires no detailed discussion.

[5] Thus we are brought to the transactions between the parties occurring after the execution of the contract, the history of which transactions has been set forth in the foregoing statement of facts. Respondents' position in this regard is twofold: First, that plaintiff had the means of ascertaining before any damage was sustained that the representations complained of were untrue, that it was guilty of laches in not employing those means, and therefore cannot be heard to complain. Second, that having knowledge that one representation was false, since the plans and specifications were not forthwith furnished and the detailed estimate was not forthwith given, the plaintiff was put upon inquiry whether all representations might not be false, and from that moment was charged with full notice; that having continued with the contract after such knowledge and means of knowledge, it waived all right it might otherwise have had to charge defendants in an action for deceit. As part of their argument herein respondents urge that by its own showing plaintiff did not exercise ordinary care and prudence, and for its failure so to do has barred itself of any right to relief. Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 142 Cal. 313, 75 Pac. 899.

The propositions thus set forth are the most serious and debatable ones in the case. By the complaint it is shown and admitted: (1) That plaintiff paid in excess of $350,000 before its fears were excited that the contract would not be completed within the stated figure of $400,000. (2) It is argued that insistence by plaintiff on the presentation of the plans and specifications, with a detailed estimate of the cost, all as contemplated by the written contract, would have served either to bind defendants or to have established that their statements could not be substantiated. If, therefore, in point of law, it was the duty of plaintiff to have exacted the presentation of these plans, specifications, and estimates, its failure so to do would be a display of a lack of ordinary care and prudence, while, upon the other hand, if these plans and specifications and estimates had been demanded and were not forthcoming, there would be notice of trickery upon the part of the defendants and of a failure to live up to their written agreement. Unquestionably, then, if plaintiff was derelict and culpable in these matters, the inevitable results would be either a waiver of the fraud or estoppel by conduct from charging upon it.

But we think the complete answer to all this is found in the fact that the situation of the parties was changed immediately and in most essential particulars from the moment their contract was entered into. From that instant they ceased to be dealing at arm's length, and from that moment the defendants became, as architects, contractors, and superintendents of construction under the pay of plaintiff, its trusted agents. Needham v. Chandler, 8 Cal. App. 126, 96 Pac. 325. Dealing with such trusted agents, plaintiff, as we have said, had the right to rely upon the representations antecedently made and, subsequent to the contract, oft repeated. It had, therefore, the right to rely upon the professed ability and skill of defendants, and upon their statement of fact that, whatever should be finally agreed upon as the plans and specifications, the upset cost of the building would not exceed $300,000, or, with the accepted modifications, $400,000. Still further, by virtue of this agency and relationship of trust and confidence it became the high duty of defendants to make full disclosure of all the knowledge which they possessed and which it was desirable or important that their principal should have. Thus, as charged, defendants knew that S. H. Woodruff was not a skilled architect, contractor, and constructor. Yet they concealed this knowledge from the principal, to whom it was of great moment. They knew, as charged, that the building could not be constructed for $300,000, and that it would cost a vastly greater sum. This knowledge, likewise, was of the utmost value to plaintiff, and it was knowledge which it was the duty of defendants to disclose to it. Clark on Contracts, p. 320; 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 69 and 70; 2 Kent's Comm. p. 582.

The test, then, of plaintiff's conduct—the determination of the question as to whether or not it acted with ordinary prudence—is not the test which would be applied between two parties acting at arm's length, each for his own interest. The real test will be found in the answer to the question whether or not plaintiff was guilty of a carelessness such as to bar its right of action for deceit against its trusted agent, dealing with matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the agent and under false representations directly made by that agent, because it did not employ every avenue and means of knowledge open to it to discover that agent's perfidy. Upon reason and authority this question must be answered in favor of plaintiff. Indeed, so plain is the proposition, so strongly must it commend itself to every mind, that we need do no more than cite Marston v. Simpson, 54 Cal. 190, and to quote briefly the principle as enunciated in 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, page 123, where it is said: "When one of the parties to a contract places a known trust and confidence in the other, any misrepresentation by the party confided in with respect to a material fact and constituting an inducement to the other party, by which an undue advantage is taken of him, is regarded as a fraud. The same is true where the circumstances are such that one of the parties must necessarily trust in the representations of the other."

So, even if plaintiff could have discovered the falsity of the representations as to upset cost by exacting a delivery of plans and specifications and estimates, since it reposed and had a right to repose a special confidence in the integrity and ability of defendants, a confidence induced by the false representations of the defendants themselves, and since under these inducements it entered into a contract involving relationships of trust, it was not guilty of any lack of prudence of which defendants can be heard to complain in not exacting the presentation of these estimates; nor, upon the other hand, did it waive its right of action for the subsequently discovered deceit by having failed to do so. And, finally, in connection with this matter, the payment by plaintiff of an excess over $350,000 before its fears were excited is explained by the further false representations of defendants that there would be coming to plaintiff large sums by way of rebate upon materials ordered and paid for, but not used.

[6] The last proposition which invites attention is that of damages; respondents contending that plaintiff has shown no detriment which at law or in equity could afford a foundation for damages. What has already been said disposes of the contention that any such damages were waived by the conduct of plaintiff. Finding itself with an unfinished building upon its hands, but one of two courses was open to it—to abandon the unfinished building to the elements, or to complete it at reasonable cost. Either course would have been justifiable. The latter unquestionably was the more prudent. In so doing, under the facts and circumstances here set out, it is idle to contend that plaintiff did, or permitted, procured, connived at, or consented to, anything in the nature of a waiver of its right of action. Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 Pac. 54. Its procedure under the contract with defendants to its partial performance was, as has been said, justifiable. Its repudiation of defendants and its completion of the building after such repudiation was wholly within its right. Cooley on Torts, § 505; St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350; 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 171, 172; 20 Cyc. p. 92.

[7] Coming thus specifically to the question of damages, it is at once apparent that the allegation that defendants received $70,000, by way of commissions for services procured through fraud and of no value to plaintiff would, upon adequate proof, entitle it to a recovery in this amount. Still further, upon what may be termed general damages, the averments of the complaint amount to a charge that plaintiff was fraudulently induced and compelled to expend in the construction of a building $300,000 in excess of the $400,000 which alone it contemplated expending, and upon which latter sum alone it can receive any fair or adequate return by way of rental. If, in truth, plaintiff has been so damaged, we think it clear that the law affords it redress. To use an extreme case to illustrate the principle: If a man by fraud were induced to erect a $700,000 building in the heart of the Sahara Desert, for the use of which building there was absolutely no demand, it would not be an answer to say that the building was economically and honestly constructed and represented a legitimate expenditure of $700,000. So here we conceive that if plaintiff can establish that, under the circumstances charged, it suffered a loss of $300,000, or any part thereof, it is justly entitled to recover it, if it further establishes that the loss was occasioned in the manner charged.

Respondent's objection, therefore, we think, goes rather to evidentiary matters than to the rule of damage. A large and growing city is not the Sahara Desert, and the burden of proof cast upon plaintiff will necessarily be a heavier one than that which a plaintiff would have to carry in the illustration given. Nevertheless, as we have said, in so far as it can be established that plaintiff was fraudulently induced to expend its moneys for a structure not, as to cost, in accordance with representations, and not capable of returning a fair interest upon the invested capital, respondents have made themselves liable. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 389, 92 Pac. 1011; Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 135 Fed. 449, 68 C. C. A. 161. For, as Chief Justice Marshall well said, in Russell v. Clark's Executors, 7 Cranch, 69, 3 L. Ed. 271: "If an act in itself immoral, in its consequences injurious to another, performed for the purpose of effecting that injury, be not cognizable and punishable by our laws, our system of jurisprudence is more defective than has hitherto been supposed."

The special demurrer does not call for particular consideration. But for the reasons heretofore given the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the general demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

163 Cal. 552

CALLAHAN v. MARSHALL et al. (S. F. 5,479.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. WAREHOUSEMEN (§ 15*)—RECEIPTS—ASSIGNMENTS—TITLE OF ASSIGNEE.

Where the purpose of an assignment of warehouse receipts was not only to confer a right to the possession of the receipts, but to the possession of the property represented by them, the assignee was entitled to the possession of the property, as against the objection that the indorsements on the receipts, which were nonnegotiable, were invalid, under Civ. Code, §§ 1858b, 1858d.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Warehousemen, Cent. Dig. §§ 31-34, 37; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

Where, in an action by an assignee of warehouse receipts for the goods represented by them, or their value, defendants treated all the receipts as indorsed to plaintiff, and admitted delivery to him, and the cause was tried on the theory that the indorsements on the receipts were in plaintiff's name as assignee, and the evidence showed that it was the indorser's intention to indorse all the receipts to plaintiff, the judgment for plaintiff would not be disturbed, on the ground that one of the warehouse receipts showed an indorsement to "T. E. C.," instead of "R. E. C.," the name of plaintiff.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1079-1120; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a defendant, testifying, introduced a receipt signed by plaintiff, and an objection to explanation by defendant as to the circumstances under which it was given was sustained, but the witness subsequently testified thereto, any error therein was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4200-4206; Dec. Dig. § 1058.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—CONCLUSION OF WITNESS.

Where the question at issue depended on what occurred between the parties, and the facts were brought out fully by the witness, a question as to whether a negotiation was ever concluded by an agreement was properly excluded, as calling for a conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

6. WAREHOUSEMEN (§ 34*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF RECEIPTS—ACTIONS BY ASSIGNEE—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action by an assignee of warehouse receipts for the goods represented by them or their value, every fact relating to a chattel mortgage, its execution and acknowledgment, but not its delivery, was shown, together with why it was not delivered, and it was not suggested that any provision of the mortgage could throw additional light on the issues, and it did not appear that plaintiff ever saw it, or knew its contents, the exclusion of the mortgage was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Warehousemen, Cent. Dig. §§ 71-85; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by R. E. Callahan against Betty Marshall and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

S. C. Denson, of San Francisco, for appellants. James M. Oliver, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, when this appeal was before it for determination, rendered the following decision, written by Presiding Justice Chipman, and concurred in by Associate Justices Hart and Burnett:

"It is alleged in the third amended complaint: That, on April 28, 1909, plaintiff was and ever since has been entitled to the possession of certain liquors, as evidenced by certain warehouse receipts of the Peninsula Warehouse Company, of the value of $2,000; that, prior to the commencement of the action, plaintiff made demand of defendants for the possession of said personal property which was refused. Plaintiff demands judgment for the possession of said goods or the value thereof.

"Defendants, in their answer, admit that the property mentioned in the complaint is stored in the said Peninsula warehouse, which latter is conducted by defendant Heise, who 'is responsible for the same and for the business thereof'; deny that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of said property, and admit its value to be over $2,000, but aver that defendant Marshall claims to be the owner thereof; admit the alleged demand for possession and refusal to deliver possession to plaintiff, but deny the alleged unlawful withholding of possession; aver that plaintiff never at any time owned the said goods, and aver that plaintiff 'obtained from J. M. Wilkins the possession of certain warehouse receipts, hereinafter mentioned, on or about April 19, 1909, by fraud and deceit hereinafter stated, and without paying any consideration therefor.'

"As a second defense, and by way of cross-complaint, defendants Marshall and Wilkins aver: That in February and March, 1909, defendant Callaghan Company, a copartnership, was operating said Peninsula warehouse; that defendant Heise has succeeded to the business, and is now sole proprietor of said warehouse, and in possession of said goods; that at four different dates in February and March, 1909, defendant Marshall, 'through her agent, defendant J. M. Wilkins, stored and deposited' in the said warehouse the property in question, and that said Callaghan Company issued its nonnegotiable warehouse receipts for the goods at said times so as aforesaid stored in said warehouse; that the said receipts and the goods represented thereby 'were, and ever since have been, and now are owned by and the property of the defendant Betty Marshall'; that about April 1, 1909, plaintiff was, and ever since has been, the agent and broker of Jerome Bassity Mercantile Company; that between said Callahan, said company, and said Wilkins negotiations were pending for the purchase by said Wilkins of the property here involved and certain other saloon property; that on April 15, 1909, plaintiff demanded of said Wilkins that he deposit the said four nonnegotiable receipts 'to show his good faith in the carrying out of the said proposed sale and purchase, and the said Wilkins, as the agent of this defendant Betty Marshall, on said 15th day of April, 1909, made the following indorsement upon each of said certificates, to wit: "To the order of R. E. Callahan. Betty Marshall, J. M. Wilkins, Agent," and then and there delivered the said four warehouse receipts to him, the said R. E. Callahan,' who receipted for the same to said Wilkins as follows: '4/15/09. In addition to the above, the following warehouse receipts have been assigned to R. E. Callahan as a deposit to show good faith in the said J. M. Wilkins carrying out the above agreement.' (Then follow the number and date of each receipt and a general description of the goods.) Signed: 'R. E. Callahan.' It is then averred in effect that said Callahan made false and fraudulent representations as to the value and earnings of the property, the subject of the negotiations, namely, the Mohawk saloon at 128 and 130 East street, San Francisco, its contents, fixtures, etc.; that, before the said negotiations were concluded, defendants discovered that they were being defrauded, and said 'negotiations were broken off and ended, and said proposed sale and purchase was never concluded or made'; that it was never intended by the parties that said Callahan should have possession of said goods, and that said receipts were delivered to him 'as the evidence of good faith and ability on the part of the said Wilkins to comply with the terms and consummate the said proposed sale and purchase,' and that plaintiff has now no right to the possession of said receipts or said goods; that plaintiff is financially irresponsible, and, should he retain possession of said goods, he will immediately sell the same, and thus deprive defendant Marshall of her property.

"Plaintiff, in his answer to the cross-complaint, denies the facts alleged as constituting the alleged fraud; avers that about April 1, 1909, said Wilkins, in connection with said negotiations, delivered to plaintiff his check for $250, 'as a deposit and part payment for the purchase of the aforesaid described property from the Jerome A. Bassity Company, being the property the subject of said sale and purchase, and that on April 15, 1909, the said Wilkins, 'agreeable to the demands of the said R. E. Callahan, as an additional deposit and further payment upon the aforesaid property, * * * delivered to the said R. E. Callahan the four nonnegotiable warehouse receipts hereinbefore referred to, and having indorsed upon the said warehouse receipts, the following indorsement, to wit.' Then follow the indorsements, showing that one was indorsed by Betty Marshall and the other by Wilkins as her agent, and all reading: 'To the order of R. E. Callahan.'

"The findings were against defendants as to the averments of fraud; that the averments of the complaint were true, except the averment 'that the claims of said defendant Betty Marshall are without right,' and as to her rights, 'if any,' that 'they are inferior and subject to the right to the possession of the plaintiff to said property and the whole thereof'; that the negotiations for the purchase of the properties mentioned in defendants' cross-complaint 'were concluded and the said purchase was consummated prior to April 25, 1909'; that it is not true that it never was intended by the parties that plaintiff should have possession of said receipts and said property represented thereby, or that said receipts 'were merely delivered to the said Callahan as evidence of good faith, or as evidence of the ability on the part of said defendant J. M. Wilkins, or on the part of any other person, to comply with the terms or to consummate the said, or any, proposed or other sale or purchase, * * * and it is untrue that defendants, or any of them, are entitled to the possession of said warehouse receipts, or any of them.'

"As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiff was 'entitled to judgment against the defendants A. P. Heise and Betty Marshall, and each of them, for the possession of the property described in plaintiff's third amended complaint, or for the value thereof, to wit, $2,000, and costs of suit.

"Judgment of dismissal was entered as to all defendants save defendants Betty Marshall and A. P. Heise, and as to them judgment was given for the possession of the property, or its value, and for costs of suit. The appeal is from this judgment on statement of the case.

"Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show the following facts: That plaintiff, as the agent of Jerome A. Bassity Mercantile Company, the owner of a certain saloon and its equipment, and also the holder of a lease of the premises in which the saloon business and a lodging house were being carried on, entered upon negotiations with defendant J. M. Wilkins for the sale to him of the saloon property and leasehold. Wilkins was admittedly the agent of defendant Marshall, but whether or not she was interested in the proposed sale and purchase does not appear. She was the owner of certain liquors on store in the Peninsula warehouse, under the control and management of defendant Heise. The purchase price of the Bassity property was $11,000, of which Wilkins was to pay $3,000 cash and give a chattel mortgage to secure the payment of the balance, $8,000. Plaintiff's evidence was that, in the course of the negotiations, Wilkins agreed to assign and did assign to plaintiff the warehouse receipts referred to in the pleadings as part payment on the purchase price, the goods to be appraised at their value and credited on the $8,000 mortgage. That the deal was closed on April 15, 1909. The cash register was locked and the bartenders informed that Wilkins was in charge from that date. That the cash register was locked pending the payment of the $3,000, which was to be made in a few days, and at the same time the chattel mortgage to be delivered to secure the balance. That, on the 23d of April the parties met at the saloon, at which time Wilkins had a check for $3,000, but did not deliver it, because requested to split the amount into certain parts, which were to go to different persons. That the cash register was unlocked, and the money counted, and found to fall short of the daily receipts which defendants claimed had been represented by the plaintiff and guaranteed to be the average daily receipts, and, after some parleying defendants declared the trade off. As to the alleged false representations of the average daily receipts of the saloon, plaintiff's evidence was that the representations had reference to a definite period prior to the negotiations, and there was evidence that the representations were true, and that plaintiff made no other representations in relation to the earnings of the saloon. There was evidence, also, sufficient to justify the finding as to the other representations with regard to the property, made by plaintiff, which were alleged by defendants to have been false.

[1] "The principal issue of fact tendered by the pleadings was whether the warehouse receipts were assigned to plaintiff for the purpose as alleged by defendants, i. e., merely as evidence of Wilkins' good faith in the negotiations, but to be returned if the trade fell through, or, as alleged by plaintiff, as a payment on account of the purchase of the property by Wilkins. The evidence was sharply conflicting on this issue; but the conflict was resolved by the trial court in favor of plaintiff, and with its conclusions, under well-settled rules, we cannot interfere.

[2] "Appellants contend with much force that the warehouse receipts were nonnegotiable—on their face so declared—and the form of indorsement upon them carried neither right to the property nor to its possession. Reliance is placed upon the statute (Civil Code, §§ 1858b, 1858d) and upon the rule as stated in Gill v. Frank, 12 Or. 507, 8 Pac. 764, 53 Am. Rep. 378. If it were necessary to distinguish that case from the present one, it might be pointed out that in the case cited the evidence was that the warehouse receipt in question was not returned to the warehouseman, either by the person to whom it was issued or by his purported assignee. The court seemed to be of the opinion, upon the facts shown, that it was never intended by the assignment that there should be any change of possession of the property, and hence the garnishment was ineffectual. But in the present case there was evidence that the purpose of the assignment was, not only to confer a right to the possession of the receipts, but to the possession of the property represented by them. Indeed, the evidence went further, and would have justified a finding that the assignment was intended to pass title to the property, had the pleadings warranted it. The court, however, adjudged only the right to the possession of the property and in this it was justified by the evidence. The discussion upon the effect of the assignment as a question of technical law is inapt, for the reason that there was evidence showing what effect it was the intention of the parties should be given the indorsements.

[3] "2. One of the warehouse receipts shows an indorsement 'to the order of T. E. Callahan,' and it is claimed that the judgment as to this receipt has no evidence to support it, and, as it is impossible to say how much of the gross value of the goods was represented by this receipt, the judgment must be reversed. A sufficient answer is found in the fact that in their pleadings defendants treated all the receipts as indorsed to plaintiff. They admitted delivery to plaintiff, and the cause was tried on the assumption that the indorsements were in plaintiff's name as assignee. The evidence showed that it was Wilkins' intention to indorse all the receipts to plaintiff. Obviously, the error in the indorsement was clerical. The mistake seems not to have been discovered until after the trial.

[4] "3. Defendant Wilkins testified in his own behalf. In his testimony he introduced a receipt, dated April 7, 1909, signed by plaintiff, which, among other things, acknowledges the receipt of the 'sum of $250 by check on Merchants' National Bank as a deposit and part payment of the purchase price of that certain saloon * * * and the leasehold interests' (describing the property the subject of the negotiations); also stating the purchase price 'as per letter submitted by J. M. Wilkins, a copy of which is herewith handed Mr. Wilkins; subject, also, to said Wilkins arranging definitely * * * for a lease on certain property he is the owner of.' To this receipt is attached another receipt, of date 4/15/09, already referred to, being the receipt for said warehouse receipts. Counsel for defendants then asked the witness: 'What was said and agreed upon between you and Mr. Callahan at that time in regard to that $250 check?' An objection that 'the paper speaks for itself and is the best evidence, that there is nothing ambiguous or unintelligible' about it, was sustained. Error is claimed of this ruling. The witness was permitted to answer what understanding or agreement was had between him and Mr. Callahan 'at that time in addition to this receipt.' He then proceeded at much length to state what was said and done between them at that time, which apparently embraced all that counsel desired to know. We discover nothing prejudicial in the ruling.

[5] "4. In the course of this witness' testimony he was asked: 'Was this negotiation ever concluded by an agreement to make the purchase? A. No, sir.' A motion to strike out the answer was granted. The question seems to have called for a conclusion, rather than for a fact. The question at issue depended upon what occurred between the parties, and as to this the facts were brought out very fully by witnesses on both sides, and from these facts the court was to judge whether an agreement to purchase was concluded.

[6] "5. Defendants, at a late stage in the trial, offered to read into the record the chattel mortgage, which was never delivered. An objection was sustained as immaterial and incompetent. Defendants claim that it was material 'to show that the pretended sale had not been completed.' Every fact relating to the mortgage, its execution and acknowledgment, but not its delivery, was shown, and why it was not delivered. It is not suggested that any provision of the mortgage could have thrown additional light on the issues. We cannot see that its inclusion in the record could have availed defendants anything. It did not appear that plaintiff ever saw it, or knew its contents.

"6. It is claimed that the motion for a nonsuit, made at the close of plaintiff's evidence, should have been granted, and that nothing occurred in the further proceedings 'to strengthen or enlarge plaintiff's right to the possession of the goods sued for.' In this defendants are in error. In support of the cross-complaint defendants introduced much evidence relating to the issues there presented. This was met by plaintiff with evidence which very materially strengthened the case as it appeared when the motion was made. It was in this evidence we find that the warehouse receipts were delivered, and that the delivery was for the purpose and with the intention as hereinbefore pointed out, and in this evidence is to be found support of the findings negating defendants' averments of fraud. It may be conceded that, had the court taken defendants' view of the evidence, it would have supported different findings and a different judgment. But inasmuch as the view in fact taken by the court finds support in the evidence, we can discover no just ground for a reversal."

A further hearing on said appeal was granted by this court, and the argument of counsel thereon was directed exclusively to the contention of appellants that, in point of law, the indorsements in favor of plaintiff, made on the nonnegotiable warehouse receipts involved here, were invalid under sections 1858b, 1858d, of the Civil Code, and that the delivery of said receipts to plaintiff so indorsed was ineffectual to transfer the right to possession of said property to him. Further consideration of this point satisfies us that the conclusion of the District Court, as declared above, respecting it, was correct. As to the issues of fact in the case, it was conceded by appellants on the argument here that there was a conflict in the evidence upon which the findings respecting them are based, and no attack was made on such findings. As to the rulings of the trial court complained of by appellants, they are fully considered and correctly disposed of in the opinion of the District Court. With that opinion as a whole we agree, and adopt it as the view of this court on the further consideration of this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

163 Cal. 538

CITY OF SANTA CRUZ v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. et al. (S. F. 5,667.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 19, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1912.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 45*)—GRANTS—LANDS GRANTED—STATUTES.

Act Cong. July 23, 1866, c. 211, 14 Stat. 209, in terms granting all the right and title of the United States to "the land within the corporate limits" of Santa Cruz, is not limited to lands at the time in the bona fide occupancy of persons by the subsequent clause, "in trust for and with authority to convey so much of said lands as are in the bona fide occupancy of parties * * * to such parties."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-127; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 45*)—GRANTS—GRANTEES—"CORPORATE AUTHORITIES."

The grant by Act Cong. July 23, 1866, c. 211, 14 Stat. 209, of land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz, to "the 'corporate authorities' of said town," is to the incorporated body, and not to the individuals then holding office as such authorities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 120-127; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1602, 1603.]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 36*)—GRANT OF TIDE-LANDS—RIGHTS OF NAVIGATION AND FISHERY.

The title of Santa Cruz under Act March 21, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 472) § 2, declaring all tidelands within the limits of the town dedicated as public grounds and the title thereto granted to it in trust for the use of the public, and without power to sell or dispose of it, with proviso that the act shall not be construed to prevent construction and maintenance of wharves thereon by authority of the laws of the state, or its free use for fishing purposes, is subject to the paramount public rights of navigation and fishery, which to a large extent are paramount to the rights of the state itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 78-80; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 122*)—ORDINANCES—PASSAGE—ADMISSIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Admission that an ordinance granting a franchise to construct and maintain a railroad along an avenue to and on the wharf of the grantee, to be constructed at or near the foot of the avenue, was duly and regularly adopted, implies that all the necessary jurisdictional steps had been taken before its passage, and that it received the required vote.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 281-289; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

5. WHARVES (§ 7*)—GRANT—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION—STATUTES.

The requirement of Pol. Code, § 2911, that the grant of authority to construct a wharf over tidelands shall specify the quantity of the land that may be used, is directory only, at least to the extent that failure to observe it in the ordinance making the grant will not, on collateral attack, make the grant void.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wharves, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. WHARVES (§ 7*)—ORDINANCES—LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION.

An ordinance granting a franchise to construct and maintain a railroad along an avenue to and on the wharf of the grantee, to be constructed at or near the foot of the avenue, having obviously been understood by all the parties as granting the right to build and maintain such wharf, having been so acted on without opposition, and being in furtherance of the paramount public use of navigation, will be given a liberal interpretation to that effect, including the making of connection between the avenue as then existing and the proposed wharf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wharves, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. WHARVES (§ 7*)—GRANTS OF FRANCHISE—CONSTRUCTION.

The City of Santa Cruz having, under Civ. Code, § 475, granted a railroad a franchise to construct and maintain for 50 years a railroad on a wharf to be constructed by the grantee in a bay, right to maintain so much of the wharf as is necessary for the railroad continues for 50 years, though under Pol. Code, § 2911, the grant would endure as a purely wharf franchise for only 20 years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wharves, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 719*)—TIDELANDS—WHARVES—OWNERSHIP BY STATE.

Counties, cities, and towns being merely made agents of the state, and not being given any right or title to tidelands or wharves erected thereon by Pol. Code, §§ 2906, 2920, authorizing the granting of authority to construct and maintain for 20 years wharves on lands bordering on navigable waters, such right to be granted by cities and towns as to lands therein, and by counties as to lands outside cities and towns, and the grant by Act March 21, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 472) § 2, to the city of Santa Cruz of all tidelands within its limits being with provision that it shall not prevent construction and maintenance thereon of wharves by authority of the laws of the state, the state, and not the city, becomes the owner and entitled to possession of a wharf on such lands within the city, on termination of the franchise therefor granted by the city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1425, 1529-1535; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 719*)—RELATION TO STATE—WHARVES—TENANT BY SUFFERANCE.

The state having the right to maintain and operate, or permit to remain for purpose of navigation, a wharf on tidelands within the city of Santa Cruz, notwithstanding the grant by Act March 21, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 472) § 2, of such lands to such city subject to the right of navigation, the city has no right of possession against a tenant by sufferance, under the state, of a wharf thereon, at least as long as it is used for the paramount purpose of navigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1425, 1529-1535; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 719*)—FILLING IN TIDELANDS—PLEASURE GROUNDS.

It not being shown that the filling in of earth under a wharf on the tidelands at Santa Cruz is not an appropriate method of strengthening the structure, or that it prevents the use of the beach for other purposes more than is necessary for the purposes of navigation, the city of Santa Cruz, the extent of the right and power of which, under Act March 21, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 472) § 2, granting such lands to it subject to the right of navigation, is to prevent an unnecessary purpresture on public use of the beach for pleasure grounds, may not interfere with such improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1425, 1529-1535; Dec. Dig. § 719.*]

11. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 7*)—LAND OF CITY.

Land of a city between a street and tide line, being proprietary land not dedicated to public use, is subject to the ordinary rules concerning title by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-42; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by the City of Santa Cruz against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., and Angellotti and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

Cassin & Lucas, of Santa Cruz, for appellants. Hugh R. Osburn, City Atty., of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the Southern Pacific Company, defendants herein, from the judgment for plaintiff and from an order refusing a new trial. The complaint on its face states a cause of action to quiet title to a tract of land in the city of Santa Cruz, 40 feet wide and 390 feet long, comprising all of the wharf, known as the railroad wharf, at Santa Cruz, except the part which extends into Monterey Bay beyond the line of ordinary low tide. About one-half of the tract in length is known as upland and lies above ordinary high tide. The remainder, the southern part, is tideland, lying between the lines of the ordinary high and low tides.

[1] 1. The town of Santa Cruz was incorporated by an act of the Legislature approved March 31, 1866. Stats. 1865-66, p. 547. It has since been changed by appropriate legislation to the present city of Santa Cruz. The plaintiff claims title to the upland solely by virtue of the act of Congress of July 23, 1866, which reads as follows: "That all the right and title of the United States to the land within the corporate limits of the town of Santa Cruz in the state of California, as defined in the act of the Legislature of that state incorporating said town be and the same are hereby relinquished and granted to the corporate authorities of said town and their successors, in trust for and with authority to convey so much of said lands as are in the bona fide occupancy of parties upon the passage of this act by themselves or tenants, to such parties. Provided that this grant shall not extend to any reservation of the United States, nor prejudice any valid adverse right or claim, if such exist, to said land or any part thereof, nor preclude a judicial examination and adjustment thereof." Act July 23, 1866, c. 211, 14 Stat. 209.

The appellants contend that this act should be construed to grant title only to lands that were at that time in the bona fide occupation of some person or persons, and that, as there is no evidence of such occupancy of the land in question here, no title thereto is shown. We do not think it can be so construed. In plain language it grants all the right and title of the United States to "the land within the corporate limits" of Santa Cruz. This describes all of the land within those limits which then belonged to the United States. The subsequent clause no doubt made the corporate authorities of the town trustees of all of such land then in the bona fide occupancy of any person, with power to convey the same to such person; but it does not purport to qualify the description of the area or to confine the operation of the grant to the occupied lands alone. The effect is that it granted all the right and title of the United States to all lands within the town limits, whether occupied or not, but charged the corporate authorities with the duty and trust to convey to every bona fide occupant the land he occupied.

[2] It is next argued that the act granted title to "the corporate authorities" of the town, and not to the town itself, and hence that the city, as successor of the town, has no title thereunder, and that the title rests either in the former corporate authorities of the town or in the present corporate authorities of the city. We cannot agree to this proposition. The evident purpose of the act was to grant the title to the incorporated body, and the term "corporate authorities of said town" was used to describe that entity, and not the individuals who then held office as such authorities. This was, in substance, held with respect to an act to grant lands to the "corporate authorities" of Petaluma, upon a like trust. Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 238. See, also, Davoust v. Alameda, 149 Cal. 74, 84 Pac. 760, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 847; Arnold v. San Jose, 81 Cal. 618, 22 Pac. 877.

[3] 2. The city claims title to the tideland by virtue of section 2 of the act of March 21, 1872. Stats. 1871-72, p. 472. It is as follows: "All of the tidelands within the corporate limits of said town, between the line of high and low tide, are hereby dedicated as public grounds, and the title thereto is granted to the town of Santa Cruz in trust for the use of the public, and without power to sell or in any manner to dispose of the same or any part thereof, but nothing herein contained shall in any manner be construed so as to prevent the construction and maintenance of wharves over, in, and through said lands by authority of the laws of the state of California, or the free use thereof for fishing purposes." Tideland situated on a navigable bay, as this land is, "is held in trust for the benefit of the people. The right of the state is subject to the public rights of navigation and fishery, and, theoretically, at least, the state can make no disposition of them prejudicial to the right of the public to use them for the purpose of navigation and fishery, and, whatever disposition she does make of them, the grantee takes them upon the same terms upon which she holds them and, of course, subject to the public rights above mentioned." Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 372; Oakland v. Oakland W. F. Co., 118 Cal. 182, 50 Pac. 277; People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 733, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93. This broad statement is somewhat qualified, as shown in the opinions in the cases cited; the qualification being that when, in preparing such tideland for the purpose of navigation, the state finds it necessary to make a sea wall and fill in the land between it and the open water, and thereby, or in some other way for the same purposes, excludes some part of such land from use for purposes of navigation, the public use for navigation as to that part becomes divested or abandoned, and it becomes proprietary land, which the state can dispose of to private use.

This qualification, however, is of no importance here, for no such exclusion or abandonment has taken place with respect to these lands. The above statute was enacted in 1872, and hence it is not affected by the limitation prohibiting the grant or sale of such land within two miles of a city or town, found in article 15, § 3, of the present Constitution. But in view of the public trust upon which the state itself holds these lands, a statute is not to be construed to devote such land to any other use, unless it clearly purports to do so. It is not necessary to determine, for the present, whether or not it could under any circumstances do this, for we do not think the act so intends. Santa Cruz has always been known as a summer resort, especially adapted to sea bathing and other sports and diversions of similar character. The act was evidently passed in recognition of this fact, and the intention was to dedicate the tideland to that use, subject, however, to the use for navigation and fishery, and to transfer the title to the town for that purpose as custodian or administrator of that public use. The purpose was simply to give Santa Cruz control of the beach when it was not in use for navigation or fishery. There was no intention to abandon or impair these primary and paramount public rights and uses, rights which, as above stated, are to a large extent paramount to the title of the state itself. That this was not intended is shown by the reservation of the right to construct and maintain wharves over the land and the free right of fishery.

The city's title is therefore subject to these paramount rights.

The Codes were enacted in 1872 by the same Legislature that passed the above special grant to Santa Cruz. They took effect as of the first day of the session. Pol. Code, § 4478. The authority to build wharves and railroads over tidelands is found in the Political Code and in the Civil Code. Section 465 of the Civil Code gives power to any railroad corporation to construct its road across, along, or upon any roadstead, bay, street, or highway. Section 470 provides that no railroad corporation must use any street, alley, or highway, or any of the land or water within any incorporated city or town, unless the right to such use is granted by a two-thirds vote of the city or town council. Sections 2906 to 2920 of the Political Code provide for the granting of authority to construct, maintain, and operate wharves, and take tolls for the use thereof, on any lands bordering on navigable waters. On lands in cities and towns, such right is to be granted by the municipal authorities; on lands outside of such cities and towns, by the county board of supervisors. Sections 2920, 2906. In either case the license is limited to 20 years. Sections 2906, 2911. Such grant gives the right of way over all tidelands of the state necessary for the particular wharf. Section 2911.

[4] The wharf of the defendants was built in 1876 by the Santa Cruz & Felton Railroad Company. It was built in connection with its railroad, and under a franchise granted to it by the town of Santa Cruz in 1875. The railroad company was incorporated in 1874 for the purpose of building and operating a railroad from the town of Felton to the tide line of Monterey Bay in Santa Cruz, and of operating and maintaining such wharves as should be necessary to the convenient operation of the railroad from Felton to said tide line. The corporate limits of Santa Cruz extended three miles into Monterey Bay. On January 9, 1875, the town of Santa Cruz, by ordinance, granted to that company a franchise, purporting to extend 50 years from that date, to construct and maintain a railroad along Pacific avenue, "to and upon the wharf of said grantee to be constructed at or near the foot of Pacific avenue." Under this franchise that company, in 1876, built the railroad and wharf in question, placing its railroad track upon the wharf and extending it thereon to the end of the wharf at deep water in the bay. That company operated the said railroad and wharf thereafter until 1887, when the appellants succeeded to its rights under the franchise, and they have ever since continued to maintain and operate the wharf and a railroad thereon. Appellants now claim that they are entitled to operate said wharf for the remainder of the life of the franchise.

Respondent asserts that, as a wharf franchise, this grant is void, because it does not appear that any notice of the application therefor was given, or that any hearing was had thereon, as required by sections 2907 and 2910 of the Political Code. On the trial the plaintiff admitted that the ordinance granting the franchise was duly and regularly adopted. This necessarily implies that all the necessary jurisdictional steps had been taken before its passage, and that it received the two-thirds vote required for a railroad franchise by section 470 of the Civil Code.

[5] Objection is also made that it is invalid, because it does not particularly describe the quantity of the tideland over which the right of way was given for wharf purposes, as required by section 2911 aforesaid. It may be that the state could prosecute an inquiry on that question, and could possibly avoid the grant on that ground. But section 2914 provides that a wharf may be 75 feet wide and may extend to navigable water. It is not contended that this wharf is wider than the statute allows. We are of the opinion that the requirement of section 2911, relating to wharves, that the grant shall specify the quantity of tideland that may be used, is directory only, at least to the extent that, upon a collateral attack such as is here made, a failure to observe this requirement will not, of itself, be sufficient to make the grant wholly void.

[6] It is obvious from the conduct of all the parties concerned that they all understood that the effect of the railroad franchise was to give or grant the right to build and maintain this wharf. It was accepted by the grantee, the wharf built, evidently at great expense, and it has been ever since maintained and operated, without objection by the town or city authorities, so far as appears, until this action was begun. The amended complaint was filed January 26, 1909. The date of beginning the action does not appear in the record, but it was not long before. The inciting cause of the suit seems to have been the announced intention of the appellants to fill in the space under the wharf with rocks and masonry in such a manner as to prevent free passage under it. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the grant was in furtherance of the paramount public use of navigation for which the state holds such lands in trust, we think it should have a liberal interpretation in favor of the grantee, in so far as it purports to grant such right. The town had the power to lay out, extend, alter, and improve public streets. A public way or approach to a public wharf is a highway, in the general sense of that term. The power to improve a street would include power to improve that part of a public street leading to a public wharf, so as to give access to the wharf from the street and facilitate passage to and from the wharf by the public. The railway is as much a part of the wharf, when constructed, as the planks of the ordinary roadway thereof. One allows footmen and ordinary vehicles to pass to the ships; the other allows the railroad cars to do so. The granting of the right to build a railroad along a street leading to the ocean front, "to and upon the wharf" to be constructed by the grantee at the foot of the street, by which would be understood the water front, where, as was the case here, the grantor also had power and authority over the water front and bay, would imply and carry with it the authority to the grantee to build the wharf at the foot of the street and extend it into the water for such distance as should be necessary to connect it with deep water and make it convenient for the commerce to be carried on over the railroad. The parties could have contemplated nothing less than this. Anything less would have made the whole structure useless. We think, therefore, that, so far as plaintiff is concerned, this grant must be held to give the right to make the connection between the street, as it then existed, and the proposed wharf, and to construct the wharf over the intervening tideland to deep water, and to maintain and use the wharf, when built, so long as the franchise continued.

[7, 8] Sections 465 and 475 of the Civil Code, in effect, give the privilege of constructing and operating a railroad over any public bay or roadstead in the state, not within a city or town, to any railroad corporation that accepts the privilege and uses it. As to the waters of such bay or roadstead which are within a city or town, a grant from the council is necessary. The council of Santa Cruz having made the grant for 50 years, and the appellants having built the railroad over the bay to deep water, and being now in the use of it, there can be little doubt that, with regard to the railroad and so much of the wharf structure as may be necessary or convenient for its maintenance and operation, the 50-year grant is still in force, and the right of possession by the appellants under it still continues. It is a wharf built "by authority of the laws of the state of California," within the meaning of the exception in the grant of 1872 to Santa Cruz.

The grant being made in 1875, it would endure as a purely wharf franchise, under section 2911 aforesaid, only 20 years from that date. Conceding that the wharf is larger than is necessary for railroad purposes, although it is not alleged or shown, and that the excess could be obtained and held only as a wharf franchise under the Political Code, we are of the opinion that upon the expiration of that franchise it would be the state, and not the city, that would succeed to the right of possession of such excess. The sections of the Political Code referred to, giving power to boards of supervisors and cities and towns to authorize the construction of wharves over lands bordering on navigable waters for purposes of navigation, do not purport to transfer to the county, city, or town, or to the governing authorities thereof, any right or title to the tidelands, or to the wharves erected under the authority given by those bodies. The Code merely constitutes these subordinate political bodies the agents of the state, and empowers them, as such, to grant the franchises mentioned on behalf of and for the state. It merely provides a means or agency whereby the right is transferred from the state to the party who builds the wharf. The title to the tidelands for that purpose, therefore, remains in the state. From this it necessarily follows that when, by efflux of time, the right thus granted by the local authority has terminated, the wharf, being suitable for the paramount public use of navigation, and also a structure of a permanent nature affixed to the realty by the grantee during the term of the license or tenancy, is a part of the realty and becomes the property of the state. Civ. Code, § 477. We think it is clear that, aside from the effect of the special act aforesaid, at the expiration of this license the city of Santa Cruz did not succeed to the wharf right or franchise, or to the possession and use of the wharf for the purposes of navigation. It was erected under the authority of the state. Hence it was within the reservation in the special act, and it is the property of the state, and the state alone has the right of possession and use, and the right to maintain an action to recover possession.

[9] It remains to consider, in this connection, whether the special act of March 21, 1872, gives the city of Santa Cruz the right to interfere with the wharf, or cause it to be abated as a nuisance or removed as a purpresture, or a right to enjoin the filling in of the space under it with rocks or other material which would obstruct the convenient use of the tideland as pleasure grounds. The complaint asks for such injunction and that the city's title be quieted, but does not ask to recover possession. The judgment does not grant the injunction, nor quiet the title, but it declares that the plaintiff shall recover possession of the land.

There can be no question but that the state, notwithstanding the grant to Santa Cruz, still retains and holds the right to erect a wharf extending over this tideland, and to operate the same, if it sees fit to do so, for the benefit of the public. Such wharf would be in furtherance of the paramount trust upon which the state holds such land. If the state did this, the city of Santa Cruz would have no right, under its grant, to interfere in the matter. The wharf in question, assuming that the interest of the appellants therein has ceased, now belongs to the state as fully as if the state itself had built it. The state has the right to maintain it or to permit it to remain for that public use. It is being operated by the appellants for the benefit of the public and with the acquiescence of the state, for the purposes of navigation. The appellants are, at least, tenants by sufferance, under the state, a title which third persons, having no interest or privity with the real owner with respect to this use, cannot question. The city has no right of possession, at least so long as it is used for the paramount purpose. The city has no interest in that use, and it cannot prevail against one who is in possession for the purpose of administering the use and is doing so. It is obvious that the judgment in favor of the city for the possession of the part of the wharf situated between the line of high and low tide, is erroneous.

[10] The principal thing complained of is the threatened act of the appellants in filling in the space under the wharf, so as to prevent the use of that part of the beach for pleasure grounds. It may be conceded that, if the appellants should place any obstruction upon the beach that was not appropriate for wharf purposes and was not useful in aid of navigation, the city, having charge of the subordinate trust relating to that land, would have the right to remove it, or cause its removal, or to prevent its erection, on the ground that it was an unnecessary purpresture upon that particular public use. This is the extent of the right and power of the city. It is not claimed or asserted that the filling in of this space is unnecessary to the use or preservation of the wharf, or that it obstructs or prevents the use of the beach for other purposes more than is necessary for the purposes of navigation. It appears to be an appropriate method of strengthening the structure. Hence it follows that the city has shown no right to interfere with such improvement of the wharf.

[11] 3. In February, 1875, another franchise was granted by the town of Santa Cruz to a company known as the Santa Cruz Railroad Company, to build a railroad into Santa Cruz over a route described therein, "with such switches and turnouts as may be deemed necessary by the grantee for the convenient use and operation of said railroad." Under this franchise that company built a railroad from Watsonville to Santa Cruz over the designated route, crossing Pacific avenue at a point a few feet northerly of the northerly or inner end of the wharf. From this road a turnout or spur track was made to connect that road with the Santa Cruz & Felton Railroad upon the wharf aforesaid. This spur track enters upon the wharf near the northerly end, and there connects with the track of said Felton Railroad, thus affording access to the wharf from the Watsonville Railroad. This connecting spur was made within three years next before the action was begun. The track of the Felton Railroad, except the portion thereof on the wharf extending from its connection with this spur track to the outer end of the wharf in the bay, has been removed, and the use of that part of that road was abandoned before this action was begun. The date of such removal and abandonment does not appear, but ever since that time the only access by rail to the wharf has been from the present Southern Pacific main track, being a part of the said Watsonville Railroad, over the spur aforesaid. So far as the part of this spur track which is laid upon the wharf is concerned, the right to maintain it is covered by and included in the right to maintain and operate the wharf. This necessarily follows from the fact that such a spur track would be a reasonable convenience for the operation of such a wharf. With respect to that portion of the spur track situated outside of the wharf, and consequently outside of the lands involved in this action, we need not concern ourselves. It is not a question in issue.

The portion of the land occupied by the wharf and situated above the line of high tide appears to be necessary for the wharf. The appellants have the same right to occupy it as a part of the wharf as they had to occupy the part between the high and low tide lines. The railroad franchise has not expired, and under that they have the right to use and operate the railroad tracks upon the wharf. The power given to the town to improve streets would include power to authorize such improvement. Under this general power the town has authority to have the small triangular part of Pacific avenue lying within the wharf lines so improved by making it a part of the wharf as to give access for footmen and vehicles to the wharf. It does not appear that this part of the wharf impairs the use of the street for ordinary purposes. It may be further said that the land of the city between the street and tide line is proprietary land not dedicated to public use. It is subject to the ordinary rules concerning title by prescription. The appellants have been in possession, under claim of right by virtue of the grant contained in the ordinance, for over 30 years. With respect to this part of the land they have title by prescription, for the term of the grant, even if it were conceded that the ordinance is invalid.

For the reasons here given, we are of the opinion that the judgment is erroneous, and that the city has established no right of possession, nor any cause for issuing the injunction prayed for.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

19 Cal. App. 481

Ex parte McMULLIN. (Cr. 189.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 16, 1912.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 331*)—JURISDICTION OF PERSON.

In a divorce suit in a Nevada court against a resident of California over whom the court acquired no jurisdiction of his person, a decree is unenforceable in California so far as it awards alimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 841, 842; Dec. Dig. § 331.*]

2. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 17*) — OFFENSE AGAINST CHILD—OMISSION TO SUPPORT—EFFECT OF DIVORCE DECREE.

Civ. Code, § 193, which requires a parent who is entitled to the custody of a child to support him, does not relieve a father from criminal responsibility under Pen. Code, § 270, for omitting to furnish necessary food, etc., though the custody of the neglected child was awarded the wife in a divorce suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-181; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 17*) — OFFENSE AGAINST CHILD—OMISSION TO SUPPORT — EFFECT OF DIVORCE DECREE—"LAWFUL EXCUSE."

That provision for alimony made by a Nevada court is not enforceable against the husband, a resident of California, because no jurisdiction of his person was acquired, does not constitute a lawful excuse within Pen. Code, § 270, which makes it an offense for a parent to willfully omit without lawful excuse to furnish necessary food, etc., for his child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-181; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Application by Smith McMullin for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

C. D. Dorn, Phil. Ware, and G. P. Hall, for petitioner. Lea, Hoyle & Ford, for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner is held in custody by the sheriff of Sonoma county upon the authority of an order of commitment, made and issued by the police court of the city of Petaluma, holding him to trial in the superior court of said county for the alleged violation of section 270 of the Penal Code, which provides as follows: "A parent who wilfully omits, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter or medical attendance for his child, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in the county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by both." Complaining that the commitment upon the authority of which he is restrained of his liberty is void, the petitioner seeks his release therefrom through the writ of habeas corpus.

The salient facts, as to which there is no controversy, may be stated as follows: Margaret J. McMullin and Harry Smith McMullin are the minor children of the petitioner and his former wife, Emma Harris McMullin; that, while still the wife of the petitioner, said Emma H. McMullin, went to the state of Nevada, taking with her said minor children; that, after her arrival in the state of Nevada, said Emma instituted an action for divorce against the petitioner, and in said action asked for the custody of said minor children; that, after the filing of the complaint in said action for divorce, the petitioner was served with summons therein in the county of Sonoma, this state, but the petitioner did not answer the complaint in said action or otherwise make an appearance therein; that thereafter, and on the 21st day of March, 1910, "a decree was duly made and given in the district court of the First judicial district of the state of Nevada, in and for the county of Ormsby, awarding said Emma Harris McMullin a divorce from petitioner, and further awarding the custody to her of said minor children. The said decree further ordered that petitioner pay to her the sum of $100 per month as her permanent alimony." It is further made to appear that in the fall of the year 1911 said Emma Harris McMullin returned to the city of Petaluma, in the county of Sonoma, this state, where she again took up her residence and now resides, and that Margaret J. McMullin, one of the minor children referred to, soon followed her mother to Petaluma and there took up her residence and still resides with her mother, the other of said minor children remaining in the state of Nevada with relatives of said Emma Harris McMullin.

It is further admitted that since the said decree of divorce was given the petitioner has not provided said minor children "with support, maintenance, or education, except that the petitioner did pay the tuition at school, and for a few other things, for said Margaret Juanita McMullin"; that the mother of said Margaret has been supporting said minor child since said divorce, and that she "has been sending money to the state of Nevada for the support of the other minor child"; that said Emma, "at all times herein mentioned, has had and still has the custody of said minors," and that the petitioner has not, at any of the times mentioned in the petition, "had any share in the custody of said minors."

On the 29th day of April, 1912, so the petition further alleges, the former wife of the petitioner qualified as guardian of the persons and estates of said minors, having previously been appointed to that office by the superior court in and for the county of Sonoma in a proceeding instituted in said court by her for that purpose. The charge in the petition that the wife of the petitioner "deserted him, and, taking with her the said minor children, went to the state of Nevada," etc., is denied by the answer; but we think that, under the circumstances as disclosed here, the issue of fact thus sought to be raised may be disregarded as unnecessary to the decision of the principal point of controversy submitted in this proceeding.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] It is conceded that, the petitioner not having been served within the state of Nevada with the summons in the suit by his wife for a divorce, the Nevada court by which the decree in said action was granted never acquired or at any time had jurisdiction of his person. It follows, therefore, that the portion of the decree allowing alimony to petitioner's wife is not enforceable in this state. Section 413, Code Civ. Proc.; First National Bank v. Eastman, 144 Cal. 491, 77 Pac. 1043, 103 Am. St. Rep. 95, 1 Ann. Cas. 626; Penoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 109, 44 Pac. 345, 32 L. R. A. 82, 53 Am. St. Rep. 165.

[2] The contention of the petitioner is that, the custody of his minor children having been awarded to their mother by the decree in the action dissolving the bonds of matrimony between him and his wife, he is, under the terms of section 196 of the Civil Code, absolved from any and all legal liability for the support and education of such children. In other words, it is the contention that, by the provisions of said section of the Civil Code, where, upon the granting of a divorce, the court awards the custody of the minor children to one of the parents, the sole responsibility of supporting and educating such children is thus cast upon the parent to whom such custody is awarded. The section of the Code referred to reads in part, as follows: "The parent entitled to the custody of a child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances."

The contention as thus explained involves the only question presented by this proceeding. The position of the petitioner, as above defined, is too broadly stated to be tenable either upon principle or precedent. It involves the statement only of a trite proposition to say that it is, in the absence of all positive law upon the subject, an imperative natural duty of parents to support and nurture their minor offspring, and it can never be assumed, where legislative regulation of that duty has been resorted to, that the Legislature intended thus to relieve parents of that first and most important of all responsibilities resting upon them, except in those cases in which circumstances absolutely compel the shifting of such responsibility to the shoulders of others. On the contrary, the specific purpose of all legislation upon the subject of the duty due from parents to their minor children is to secure the religious execution of that natural duty. The proposition that parents have no right to so neglect their minor children as to make them a charge upon other persons or upon the public is too obvious to be referred to, but the policy of the government, in the enactment of laws regulating the duty, imposed by natural laws, owing to minor children from their parents, is to not only prevent this very result but to compel the performance of that duty in such manner, consistent with the circumstances of the parents, as that their offspring may be started out in the battle for existence with some degree of preliminary equipment. Of course, section 196 of the Civil Code should be enforced according to its plain intent and purpose in all proper cases, but it cannot justly be given a construction that would have the effect of circumventing rather than promoting the very ends which it and our whole system of laws upon the subject to which it relates were designed to bring about.

The main reliance of counsel for petitioner, for the support of the exceedingly broad construction to which they have been led to subject section 196, is upon the decision in the case of Selfridge v. Paxton, 145 Cal. 713, 79 Pac. 425. But that case although some language is used in the opinion which might give some color to the construction given by the petitioner of the intent and scope of section 196, is not in point here. The important line of distinction between that case and the one at bar in our opinion lies in the fact that in the cited case it appeared that, contemporaneously with the granting of the divorce, the husband and wife entered into a contract by the terms of which the former agreed, among other things, to pay to the latter, to whose custody the minor children were awarded by the decree, for the support and maintenance of said children, the sum of $13,200, payable in monthly installments of $100, until the whole amount should be paid. It was therefore held that the husband could not be bound for the expense incident to medical attention given one of said minor children by the plaintiff, a physician, who brought his action to recover for professional services so performed against the husband. In the case here it appears, and it is admitted, that the court by which the decree of divorce was granted made provision in said decree for the payment by the husband to the wife of the sum of $100 per month as permanent alimony, and while it does not appear that the court made specific provision for the support and education of the children at the hands of the petitioner, or otherwise provided for their support by the husband than through the alimony so allowed, the presumption is that such alimony included an allowance sufficient for the support of both the mother and the children, and that such was the purpose of the order. And the very fact, admitted by the petitioner, that the alimony thus allowed cannot be enforced in this state brings this case within the rule as laid down in the very recent case of the People v. Schlott, 122 Pac. 846, in which the chief justice, who wrote the opinion, takes occasion to limit and qualify the effect of the decision in the case of Selfridge v. Paxton, supra. In the Schlott Case, by the decree granting the divorce, the defendant was ordered to pay his wife the sum of $50 per month for the support of herself and their child. He willfully and without lawful excuse failed and omitted to pay the required sum per month, and it was held that he was, therefore, amenable to prosecution under section 270 of the Penal Code.

[3] But counsel for the petitioner seem to be of the opinion that the fact that the provision for alimony made by the Nevada court is not enforceable in this state constitutes within the meaning of that phrase as used in section 270 of the Penal Code, a "lawful excuse" for the omission to support his minor children. This opinion appears to have been inspired by that portion of the opinion in the Schlott Case wherein the provision contained in the decree for alimony is referred to as a "valid" one, from which language counsel seem to infer that the court intended to say that, in order to render the party sought to be required to pay alimony amenable to prosecution under section 270 of the Penal Code, the provision for alimony must be valid in all respects. We do not think the court intended to go that far, or to lay down any such rule as counsel seem to have worked out from the decision in that case.

We do not understand that the efficacy of section 270 of the Penal Code or its potency to accomplish the purpose of its enactment is made to depend upon the proposition whether or not a court, having, upon the granting of a decree of divorce, undertaken to make provision for the support by one of the parents of the minor children, has succeeded, in a legal aspect, in making a valid order providing for such support. The simple issue to be tried and determined under said section is whether a parent, without lawful excuse, willfully omits to furnish his minor children with necessary food, clothing, etc., and, in so far as it may constitute proof of the charge is concerned, we are unable to perceive any less force in the fact that the court attempted but for some legal reason failed to make a valid provision in the decree of divorce for the support of the child than in the fact, where it is a fact, that the court had succeeded in its attempt to make such a valid provision. In the one case no less than in the other it must appear or be assumed that the court found that it was proper and necessary that the parent to whom the provision was intended to apply should continue to contribute to the support of the minor.

Speaking concretely, the provision in the decree awarding the custody of the minor children to their mother—the plaintiff in the divorce action—and that requiring the petitioner to pay the mother permanent alimony in an amount sufficient for the support of both herself and said children, presuppose findings that the petitioner was not a proper person to have the custody and control of said children and that their mother was financially unable to bear the sole burden of their proper support under the circumstances as disclosed to the court, or, at any rate, that the petitioner, for sufficient reasons, should not be altogether relieved of the assumption of that natural burden. Thus it unmistakably appears that the necessity of the petitioner's assistance in the proper support of the children is shown and his duty in that respect plainly defined in the decree; yet, if petitioner's position here be sound, he may rest immune from prosecution under section 270 of the Penal Code merely because the enforcement of the order requiring him to support or contribute to the support of his minor children may be obstructed for a purely legal reason, not based upon the merits of the provision. We do not think that any court can be found that will construe the circumstances of this case as the petitioner views them.

Our conclusion is, as stated, that the provision in the decree divorcing the petitioner and his wife for permanent alimony constitutes proof that the court found that it was necessary that the petitioner should continue to contribute to the support of his minor children and that, therefore, it cannot be held that his divorced wife must provide said children with support by reason of the provision contained in section 196 of the Civil Code.

The writ is, accordingly, discharged and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

HAYT v. BENTEL (Civ. 1,064.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. June 15, 1912. On Petition for Rehearing, July 15, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 98*)—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT BY PURCHASER—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1688, 1691, providing that a contract is extinguished by rescission, that a rescission not affected by consent can be enforced only by the party seeking to rescind restoring or offering to restore to the adverse party everything of value received under the contract, a purchaser given possession at the time of the execution of the contract, stipulating for payment of the price in installments, and for a deed conveying the property free from all incumbrances, could not rescind for the vendor's inability to convey a good title without restoring, or offering to restore, the possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 163-165; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. CONTRACTS (§ 274*)—RESCISSION—EFFECT.

A rescission of a contract extinguishes it, and places the parties in the position they would occupy if the contract had never been made, and all rights transferred, released, or created by the contract are revested, restored, or discharged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1202-1206; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 45*)—RESCISSION—CONDITIONS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, providing that a rescission not affected by consent can be enforced only by the party seeking a rescission restoring or offering to restore the property received under the contract, one who seeks to rescind a contract without the assent of the other, and who sues for the money paid under the contract, must allege in his complaint that he has restored or tendered restoration of the property received by him, or allege facts excusing him from so doing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 100, 101; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*) — PRESUMPTIONS—RECORD.

Though on appeal on the judgment roll alone in an action under Civ. Code, § 3406, by a purchaser in possession to rescind the contract and recover the money paid, the court will assume in support of a judgment for the purchaser that the trial court imposed the proper conditions authorized by section 3408, yet, where the appeal is on a bill of exceptions purporting to disclose the matters and proceedings affecting the case, a judgment for the purchaser who was in actual possession at the time of the execution of the contract cannot be sustained in the absence of an order making the relief granted subject to the condition that the purchaser restore possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777-3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Mrs. S. M. Hayt against George R. Bentel. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. C. Millsap and Millsap & Sparks, for appellant. Smith, Miller & Phelps, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This action was brought to recover from defendant certain installments of money, with interest thereon, paid by plaintiff pursuant to the terms of a contract for the purchase and sale of certain real estate. Judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment upon a bill of exceptions.

Among other things, the contract provided that upon plaintiff paying $275 cash upon the making of the agreement, $275 on June 29, 1906, and a like payment of $275 on June 29, 1907, together with interest on deferred payments, it being provided that time should be made the essence of the contract, defendant would by good and sufficient deed convey the property free and clear of incumbrance to plaintiff, who, as provided by the terms of the contract, was given immediate possession of the premises. The contract further provided that, in case plaintiff made default in the payments, defendant at his option might declare the whole sum remaining unpaid due and payable, or cancel the contract, re-enter and take possession of the land, and retain all moneys paid by plaintiff as rent for the use and occupation thereof. The complaint alleges that plaintiff made default in the last payment due June 29, 1907, but that on October 29, 1908, plaintiff made a payment of $50 on account of the principal sum of $275, and paid the interest on the balance of the principal up to December 29, 1908, at which time it was agreed by the parties "that as soon as the deed was executed and delivered to plaintiff she would pay him the balance due under the contract"; that in October, 1909, plaintiff offered to pay defendant the balance of the purchase money and demanded a deed for the property, which defendant refused to execute, alleging as a reason therefor that he could not deliver a conveyance of title in accordance with the said contract owing to the fact that the same was clouded by an incumbrance. Thereafter, on January 14, 1910, plaintiff again made tender of the full amount due and demanded a deed in accordance with the terms of the contract, but defendant refused to comply with the demand. On February 4, 1910, plaintiff declared the contract rescinded, notified defendant of such rescission, and demanded repayment of all moneys which she had theretofore paid pursuant to the terms of the contract, together with interest thereon, which defendant refused to pay. It was further alleged that at the time of the execution of the contract, and from thence up to the commencement of the action, the property was incumbered and the title thereto clouded so that it was impossible at any time for defendant on his part to comply with the terms of the contract by conveying to plaintiff title to the property free and clear of incumbrance.

[1] A general demurrer interposed by defendant to the complaint was overruled. In thus ruling we think the court erred. It appears from the contract, made a part of the complaint, that plaintiff was at the time of the execution thereof given immediate possession of the premises. She could not, upon the ground of the vendor's inability to convey a title free and clear of incumbrance, rescind the contract and insist upon the return of her money, with interest thereon from the date of payment, while retaining that which she had received under the terms of the contract, viz., the possession of the premises. "Where the contract provides for the vendee taking possession, the remedy of the purchaser, where the * * * vendor * * * is unable to make conveyance as stipulated in the contract, is to rescind the contract, or offer to, and to restore the possession, in which case he may recover the purchase money advanced and the interest, together with the value of his improvements, deducting therefrom such sum as the use of the premises may reasonably have been worth. If, on the other hand, the purchaser chooses not to rescind, but to retain possession under the contract, he can do so only on the condition that he pays the purchase money and interest according to the contract." Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 50, 11 Pac. 492. This language was quoted with approval and applied in the case of Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 512, 27 Pac. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209, where it was held that the purchaser of land in possession thereof under a contract of sale providing for the conveyance of a good and perfect title thereto could not, upon the vendor's inability to convey such title, retain both the land and the purchase money, but, if he chooses to retain the possession of the land, he must pay the price according to the contract, and receive such title as the vendor is able to give. Otherwise, if he elects to recover the purchase money paid, he must restore the possession of the property to the vendor and rescind the contract. In Rhorer v. Bila, 83 Cal. 54, 23 Pac. 275, it is said: "A purchaser cannot remain in possession of lands under a contract and at the same time refuse to pay the purchase price. If the title fails, or the vendor refuses to convey, an action on the covenants of his deed or contract will give him all the relief to which he is entitled." For the purpose of our decision, it may be conceded that the complaint shows facts sufficient to excuse plaintiff's default in making the payments, and that by reason thereof and the tender made by plaintiff she might, without surrendering possession of the property, have maintained an action on the contract for specific performance thereof. Such, however, is not the character of this case. She declared the contract rescinded.

[2] The effect of a valid rescission is to extinguish the contract. Civ. Code, § 1688. "The effect of the rescission of a contract is to place the parties in the same position as if it had never been made; and all rights which are transferred, released or created by the agreement are revested, restored or discharged by the avoidance." 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 626.

[3] Hence, where one party without the assent of the other rescinds and sues to recover that which he has paid under the terms of the contract, his complaint, unless facts are stated excusing him from so doing, must show that he has restored or tendered restoration, upon condition that the other shall do likewise, of that which he is shown to have received pursuant to the terms thereof. Section 1691, Civ. Code. Plaintiff was in no position to insist upon the return of the amount paid and interest thereon from date of payment, and continue in the use, occupation, and enjoyment of the property, thus compelling defendant to resort to an action of eviction.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [4] The action herein may be assumed as under section 3406, Civil Code; that the court under section 3408, Civil Code, possessed the power to impose all proper conditions. Had this appeal been upon the judgment roll, the assumption necessary in support of the judgment would follow. Chicago Clock Co. v. Tobin, 123 Cal. 378, 55 Pac. 1007. The appeal, however, is upon a bill of exceptions purporting to disclose all matters and proceedings affecting the case, and it does not appear therefrom that any showing was made with reference to possession, the right to which is admitted by the pleadings to be in plaintiff. Willis v. Wozencraft, 22 Cal. 608. The fact that plaintiff was in default destroys any effect which would otherwise be considered in connection with the terms of the contract, as fixing the rights of the parties upon the happening of such event. We are prepared to concede that the judgment would destroy the bare right of possession, disassociated from actual possession, but we are still of opinion that, under the authorities cited in the original opinion, actual possession is presumed from the terms of a contract conferring such right. Hence, in the absence of an order making the relief granted subject to the condition that plaintiff restore possession, our conclusion must have been the same as that reached by considering the appeal upon the sufficiency of the complaint under the general demurrer interposed thereto. This being true, plaintiff could derive no benefit from a rehearing.

Rehearing denied.

19 Cal. App. 458

TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. KING LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO. et al.

(Civ. 1,085.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 15, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 13, 1912.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 102*)—CONTRACTS—EFFECT.

A contract reciting that, on payment of two notes at maturity, the maker should have an exclusive option to purchase land at a fixed price, was rescinded by the payee notifying the maker that his right to an option was terminated for failure to pay the second note, discharging the maker's and his guarantors' liability on that note, the first having been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 175-177; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by the Title Insurance & Trust Company against the King Land & Improvement Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stephens & Stephens, for appellant. Scarborough & Forgy and Willis I. Morrison, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff on a promissory note made for the principal sum of $10,000 executed by the King Land & Improvement Company and W. J. King, and guaranteed by respondents G. W. Burleigh, C. R. Ward, and Robert McFadden. Judgment was in favor of the respondents mentioned. The appeal is on the part of plaintiff, and is taken from the judgment, and also from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

In October, 1907, plaintiff, acting as trustee for the owners of a considerable acreage in the Rancho Sausal Redondo, in Los Angeles county, made an agreement with W. J. King, whereby it was provided that the said King should be given an option to purchase the real estate so held in trust for the total amount of $130,000. A similar agreement had previously been made between the same parties; but, King having failed to fulfill the obligations thereof on his part to be performed, a new arrangement was consummated, and a second writing executed. In this writing it was first recited that it was the desire to give a further extension of the option to King and that the original agreement was abrogated and annulled, and it was then recited: "2. That in consideration of the nine thousand ($9,000) dollars heretofore paid as herein recited, and in further consideration of the execution of two promissory notes to the party of the first part by the party of the second part and the King Land & Improvement Company, a corporation, said notes dated October 1, 1907, drawing interest from date at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the first of said notes for $6,000, payable on or before November 5, 1907, the second of said notes for $10,000, payable on or before March 1, 1908, and both of said notes indorsed and guaranteed by W. J. King, Chas. Kern, Dr. Geo. Burleigh, A. C. Black, H. E. Smith, C. R. Ward, Robt. McFadden, H. C. Cartmell, Wm. I. Innes, and Albert Fuller, and in consideration of the prompt payment of said two promissory notes at the maturity thereof, time being of the essence of the contract with respect to the payment thereof, the party of the first part gives and extends to the party of the second part the exclusive option right and privilege of purchasing the said real property from the party of the first part at the price of one hundred and thirty thousand ($130,000) dollars, gold coin of the United States. If the party of the second part shall promptly pay both of said notes on or before the maturity thereof, and shall on or before the 1st of April, 1908, pay to the party of the first part the further sum of $18,334, time being of the essence of said payments, together with interest on both of said promissory notes, as herein provided, and with interest upon the said $18,334 at 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st of April, 1907, and if the party of the second part shall then pay to the party of the first part interest upon the sum of $16,000 from April 1, 1907, to October 1, 1907, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, then the party of the first part will convey to the party of the second part, or his assigns, the said property, by deed in form of grant, bargain, and sale, said deed to provide however, that the taxes of the year 1907-8 and the year 1908-9 shall be paid by the party of the second part or his assigns, and thereupon and contemporaneously therewith the party of the second part and his assigns in the said property will execute to the party of the first part two promissory notes each for the sum of $43,333.33, both bearing interest from the 1st day of April, 1907 at the net rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, and if not so paid to be compounded, and the party of the second part and his assigns will execute to the party of the first part a purchase-money mortgage upon the said property (or a trust deed, at the election of the party of the first part) in the form used by the party of the first part, providing, among other things, that the interest secured thereby shall be net at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and making such provision in the said mortgage or trust deed, at the option of the party of the first part, as shall secure that end."

The promissory notes were duly executed as in the agreement provided, and the first note of $6,000 was paid. Default was made in the payment of the $10,000 note, and on April 1st the plaintiff caused to be served upon King the following notice: "Dear Sir: Under an agreement entered into between you and this corporation on the 1st day of October, 1907, it was, among other things, provided that if you should promptly pay a note of $10,000 in said contract referred to, on or before March 1, 1908, time being of the essence of the contract with respect to the payment thereof, the undersigned would give and extend to you the exclusive option and privilege of purchasing certain real property described in said agreement. You, having failed to pay the said $10,000 promissory note in full, have, of course, failed to secure the option of purchasing said property, and you are hereby notified that all your rights under the said option agreement have been, by your failure to promptly pay said note, terminated, and you are hereby given formal notice to that effect."

Subsequently this action was brought for the purpose of securing a judgment against the defendants on the $10,000 note. The trial court made its findings in favor of the respondents first mentioned herein. It is argued on behalf of appellant that the trial court erred in concluding that upon the giving of the above notice, which plaintiff caused to be served upon King on April 1st, plaintiff rescinded the contract and thereby relieved respondents from any liability accruing on account of the $10,000 note. This contention is made upon the argument that the agreement contemplated that the payments evidenced by the $6,000 and $10,000 promissory notes were payments to be made to plaintiff in consideration of an option to purchase being extended to King, and that, the consideration having been executed by the plaintiff, liability accrued upon the promissory notes at the dates of their maturity. It is evident that the trial court, in interpreting the contract of the parties, concluded that the agreement constituted an agreement of sale which, upon rescission thereof exercised by the plaintiff, worked a waiver of the right to collect any of the payments of money provided therein to be made. Viewing the contract in this light, appellant concedes that the judgment would be right. The contract, however, does not appear to impose an obligation on the part of King to purchase at all events; in other words, no terms appear under which it would seem that the plaintiff would have the right to tender full performance, including an offer to transfer title, and enforce a demand against King that he make all of the payments therein specified and execute the two final promissory notes for $43,333.33 each. The contract, therefore, is incomplete as a contract to sell and to purchase, and must be considered as one by which King was to be allowed an optional right to make the purchase upon the terms agreed.

The question then presents itself as to whether these payments, evidenced by the promissory notes for $6,000 and $10,000, respectively, were payments to be made for an executed consideration, to wit, an optional right extending from the time of the making of the agreement up to the date of the maturity of said notes. We are of the opinion that it was not contemplated that King should have any option at all until he made payment of the promissory notes according to their terms, and that the condition imposed upon him was that he should become possessed of this option right when, and when only, both promissory notes had been paid according to their terms; that is, if he paid the notes in full and promptly, then the option to purchase would be extended to him. On the contrary, if he failed to pay the notes promptly, the option right which was to accrue upon these payments being made would not accrue, and plaintiff might decline to allow him to purchase the property for the price agreed upon, and rescind the agreement, which in fact it did do. In aid of this conclusion is the language used by plaintiff itself in the notice which it gave to King on April 1, 1908. In that notice it is recited that the agreement provided that, if the $10,000 note was paid promptly, "the undersigned would give and extend to you the exclusive option and privilege of purchasing certain real property described in said agreement. You, having failed to pay the said $10,000 promissory note in full, have, of course, failed to secure the option of purchasing said property." The agreement, then, as we interpret it, so far as it affected the giving of an option, was executory on both sides. It was rescinded on the part of the plaintiff because of the failure of defendant to satisfy conditions imposed upon him, and, having been rescinded, the makers and guarantors of the promissory note for $10,000 were thereby relieved of any liability on that account. Certainly plaintiff could not be permitted to collect the full consideration agreed to be paid as the price of an optional right, and at the same time decline to permit the exercise of such right. King could not, under his agreement, have claimed the privilege of purchasing the real property at the agreed price of $130,000 until he had satisfied the indebtedness evidenced by the promissory notes which constituted the consideration to be paid by him for that privilege. The effect of the notice of rescission given to King by plaintiff was to inform him that the optional privilege to purchase would not be extended to him, because he had failed to pay the consideration therefor; and, if the right of plaintiff to collect upon the $10,000 note is sustained, the result would be that full payment would be exacted for a right which plaintiff declined and refused to give in return therefor.

The contract under consideration is difficult of construction, and it is not easy to perceive just what was in the minds of the parties as to their intent at the time they made it. If there had been incorporated in it sufficient to show an obligation on the part of King to purchase at all events, then there would be sufficient substance to make a very complete contract of sale and purchase. Being lacking in such provisions as we have mentioned, however, we think it should be construed as a contract to give an option, and one subject to the construction which we have given it. We conclude that the judgment of the trial court was right, nevertheless, because plaintiff, having rescinded the agreement to give an option, waived its right to exact payment on the $10,000 note, and that all of the makers and guarantors thereof were consequently relieved from liability.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 469

PEOPLE v. ROSS. (Cr. 244.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 16, 1912.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 69*)—DEFENSES—RESISTING ILLEGAL SEARCH.

Neither possession by a city recorder of a search warrant, prepared by him, but not issued to any one, nor suspension, during good behavior, of a sentence imposed by him on defendant for violating a liquor ordinance, constituted any authority for his invading defendant's premises in a search of his house for liquor; but such conduct constituted a trespass, and an invasion of, and injury to, defendant's rights, entitling him, under Pen. Code, §§ 692, 694, to employ sufficient resistance to prevent the trespass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-101; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 810*)—TRIAL—INCONSISTENT INSTRUCTION.

Giving an instruction inconsistent with a proper one is calculated to prevent the jury giving due consideration to the evidence in the light of the correct instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1968; Dec. Dig. § 810.*]

3. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 56*)—ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON.

Defendant was not guilty of the felony of assault with a deadly weapon, for pointing a pistol at one who was a trespasser on his premises and making an unauthorized search, telling him to go, and keeping it so pointed till he left.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 80, 81; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Charlie Ross appeals from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

Earl Rogers, W. H. Dehm, and H. L. Giesler, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon. The judgment of the court was that he be imprisoned for a term of one year in the state prison at Folsom and pay a fine of $2,000. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

At the time in question defendant was conducting a public feed yard in the city of Imperial, within which inclosure was located a shack or house wherein he lived. Victor Sterling, upon whom the alleged assault was committed, was city recorder of Imperial. Some time prior to the alleged assault, defendant had, in the recorder's court presided over by Sterling, pleaded guilty to the charge of violating a liquor ordinance of the city of Imperial; whereupon it was adjudged that he should pay a fine of $300 and serve 90 days in jail, the execution of which sentence, however, was "suspended during defendant's good behavior." On November 20, 1911, the day upon which the assault is alleged to have been committed, Sterling, having been informed that defendant was in possession of a quantity of liquor with the intent to use the same in violation of law, wrote out a search warrant, directed to any sheriff, marshal, constable, or policeman in Imperial county, commanding such officer to search the house, buildings, and rooms of defendant for beer in bottles and whisky in bottles, jugs, or kegs. He never issued or delivered this warrant to any officer empowered to execute the same; but, retaining it in his possession, he called to his aid three persons, two of whom were city marshals of Imperial, and all of whom were in fact armed, and these four went in an automobile to defendant's feed yard for the dual purpose, as stated by Sterling, "to investigate if he [defendant] was keeping good faith with the court," and to see if he had any liquor on the premises. Upon driving inside the inclosure, his armed escort, making no display of their arms, however, remained in the automobile, and Sterling got out and proceeded toward the house of defendant, about 150 feet from the point where they had stopped. He inquired for Ross, who, when Sterling was about 20 feet from the house, came out, whereupon Sterling said to him: "We have the necessary papers, and we want to see what you have here." Ross drew a pistol from his pocket, and, saying, "I have had enough of you sons of bitches," pointed it at Sterling, and told him, in effect to leave the premises, threatening to shoot him. Sterling, while parleying with defendant, walked towards the automobile, and defendant, with a rifle, which during the parley, he had secured from his house, and still pointing the pistol at Sterling, followed him 30 or 40 feet, until Sterling got into the machine and with his companions drove away. The uncontradicted evidence further shows that defendant "had every chance to fire the gun if he wanted to," that "nothing prevented him from doing it," that he did not do so, and "made no effort on his part to discharge the firearm."

[1] The record bristles with error. Neither the alleged search warrant prepared by the city recorder, but never issued to any officer authorized to execute the same, nor the suspension of the sentence imposed upon defendant upon his plea of guilty to the charge of violating the liquor ordinance of the city of Imperial, constituted any authority on the part of Sterling for invading defendant's premises and engaging in a search of his home to see what he had there. Hence all evidence admitted over defendant's objections touching these matters should have been excluded. Not only were these errors highly prejudicial to defendant's rights, but the effect thereof was greatly accentuated by an instruction given by the court in response to a request of the jury for further information as to certain matters as follows: After the lapse of some 20 hours, during which the jury had failed to reach a verdict, it was brought into court, when the foreman said: "We want to ask if Mr. Sterling visited that place as an officer or as a private citizen? Did he have the right officially to visit that place? The Court: The court might answer that question by giving you some further instructions. Foreman: There is another question almost the same. We want to know if Victor Sterling, as recorder, if he releases a man on probation, if he then is probation officer so far as that man is concerned." In reply to these questions the court said: "There is no other provision, I believe, in the inferior courts, for the supervision of those placed on probation on their good behavior, than that the judge of the court has the entire supervision of the case. The superior court has a probation officer, an assistant officer to the court, to attend to those matters; but the inferior courts have no assistant and no officer to assist them in matters of that kind. If there is a criminal matter, they have the right to call upon the peace officers to serve papers or to do anything to carry out the orders of the court; but as to probation or parole, the transactions are entirely between the highest officer of the court, the judge, and the person placed on parole." It thus appears that, in effect, the court instructed the jury that Sterling, as city recorder, by reason of the suspension of sentence during defendant's good behavior, was empowered to enter his premises and search the same and supervise his conduct, and that as to defendant he (Sterling) was for the time vested with all the rights and powers of a probation officer appointed by the superior court. We know of no law conferring such authority upon a city recorder.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Other questions asked by the jury were the following: "We want to know if Victor Sterling, as probation officer, had a right to serve a search warrant?" "Some of the jurors want to know if he had a right to go there and serve a search warrant?" "Has a judicial officer, or Victor Sterling, a right, as a judicial officer, to visit that man's place any more than any other private citizen?" It is plainly apparent from the questions asked by the jury that they were impressed with the evidence, erroneously admitted, showing not only that Sterling had a search warrant in his pocket when he visited defendant's place, but also showing that defendant at the time was under a suspended sentence imposed by Sterling as city recorder, which fact, they were instructed by the court, gave Sterling as such officer "the entire supervision of the case." Moreover, by instruction No. 16 the jury were told that "presenting a loaded gun at a person who is within range is an assault, * * * if accompanied by such circumstances as denote an intention existing at the time, coupled with a present ability of using actual violence or inflicting violent personal injury upon another; and if under such circumstances a defendant exacts a condition to be at once performed, which he has no legal right to impose, and his intent is immediately to enforce performance of that condition by violence, and he places himself in readiness and in position so to do, and proceeds as far as it is then necessary for him to go in order to carry out his intention, then it is in law as much an assault as if he had actually shot at the other party and missed him." The evidence erroneously admitted, showing that defendant was at liberty under a suspended sentence imposed by the city recorder, who, as erroneously stated by the court, possessed the right to supervise his conduct, etc., was clearly calculated to impress the jury with the fact that Sterling had a legal right to invade defendant's premises in a search for liquor, and therefore, since Sterling was acting under power legally vested in him, defendant, as stated in the instruction last quoted, exacted a condition to be at once performed which he had no right to impose.

[2, 3] By instruction No. 14 the jury were told an attempt can be manifested only by an act which will end in the consummation of the offense, but for the intervention of circumstances independent of the will of the accused. The uncontradicted evidence of Sterling that defendant had "every chance to fire the gun if he wanted to," that "nothing prevented him from doing it," that he did not do so, and "made no effort on his part to discharge the firearm," makes it apparent that no circumstances independent of the will of the accused intervened to prevent the consummation of the assault. Moreover, instruction No. 15, clearly in conflict with instruction No. 14, was well calculated to, and no doubt did, prevent the jury from giving due or any consideration to the evidence in the light of instruction No. 14. By instruction No. 15 the jury were told that the voluntary abandonment of the alleged attempt by defendant constituted no defense. As applied to the facts of this case, this latter instruction is not only inapplicable, but irreconcilable with the statement as to the law made in the instruction immediately preceding it. The position of Sterling was that of a trespasser upon defendant's premises. He was there with the avowed intention of unlawfully entering and searching his home for whisky. Such acts constituted an invasion and injury to the rights of defendant, and under sections 692 and 694, Penal Code, he was entitled to employ sufficient resistance to prevent the commission of the offense—not to the extent, however, of committing a homicide (section 197, Pen. Code)—about to be committed by the trespasser. Conceding that the acts of defendant might constitute a misdemeanor, as defined by section 417, Penal Code, nevertheless, under the circumstances here shown, they were insufficient to constitute the felony charged. The circumstances clearly distinguish this case from the facts disclosed in People v. Montgomery, 15 Cal. App. 315, 114 Pac. 792, and People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 78 Pac. 470, where the assault was made by the trespasser, and the consummation thereof was prevented by acts of others and independent of the will of the accused.

An examination of the entire record convinces us that the verdict of the jury was reached by a consideration of incompetent evidence, considered in the light of erroneous instructions, from which they concluded that, in the invasion of defendant's home for the avowed purpose of searching his effects, Sterling was acting within his power as city recorder, and that defendant was not warranted in offering any resistance to prevent the same, and, further, that, notwithstanding the voluntary abandonment of the alleged attempt by defendant before the consummation of the offense, which the evidence tended to prove, he was, nevertheless, guilty as charged.

It is unnecessary to discuss other alleged errors as to instructions both given and refused. We are satisfied that the judgment and order should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

19 Cal. App. 464

STANTON et al. v. FREEMAN et al.
(Civ. 1,112.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. July 15, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action to quiet title under a deed of which the grantor obtained possession and which he refused to return, evidence that one of the plaintiffs testified in a former action that the deed was executed on condition that it should pass only on plaintiffs effecting certain sales for the grantor, which they did not do, was properly admitted to show the consideration for the deed, and to corroborate the grantor's statement as to the nature of the consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 89-92; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 39*)—DEFENSES.

In a suit to quiet title under a deed, which was to pass to plaintiffs only in the event that they effected sales of other property for the grantor, which they did not do, it was not necessary that defendants demand by a cross-complaint that the deed be delivered up and canceled before they could defend against plaintiffs' claim on the ground of failure of consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 42*)—HOSTILE CHARACTER OF POSSESSION.

Defendants' possession of land could not be adverse to the claim of plaintiffs under a particular deed prior to the time that the deed was executed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 207-212; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

5. DEEDS (§ 200*)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action to quiet title under a deed from one of the defendants, evidence that for nearly four years plaintiffs did not attempt to take possession of the property was pertinent as a circumstance at least tending to corroborate defendant's claim that the deed was not to pass unless plaintiffs effected sales of other property for him, which they did not do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 601; Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by P. A. Stanton and another against Archibald C. Freeman and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Bourdette & Bacon, Smith & Smith, and Frank James, for appellants. Willoughby Rodman and Willis I. Morrison, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Action brought by plaintiffs to quiet title to certain lots of land in the townsite of Inglewood in Los Angeles county. Judgment was in favor of defendants, and plaintiffs have appealed from an order denying a motion made by them for a new trial.

[1, 2] Prior to November, 1902, plaintiffs, as real estate agents and brokers, had been employed by defendant Freeman and his wife to negotiate the sale of property owned by said defendants at Inglewood. Some property had been sold under that agency, and in November, 1902, there was pending a sale of a large amount of said property under negotiations made by plaintiffs with parties representing the Inglewood Water Company. Defendant Archibald C. Freeman visited the office of plaintiffs one day while such negotiations were under way, and there, at the suggestion of plaintiff Van Alstyne, made a deed, which was signed and duly acknowledged by himself and wife, and purported to convey to plaintiffs title to the property in question in this action. This deed was placed among the papers of plaintiffs at their office, and two weeks later Freeman called and asked to examine it. It had never been recorded, and Van Alstyne procured it from his files and handed it to Freeman. Freeman made some statement to the general effect that he wanted to check up the lines, and took the deed away and refused to return it. There were some negotiations between counsel for Freeman and plaintiffs following, in which Freeman's attorney endeavored to secure the consent of plaintiffs to have the deed placed in escrow along with other papers pertaining to the transfer of the property about which negotiations had been had, as before mentioned; but to this course plaintiffs refused to assent and the deed was left in the possession of Freeman's attorney. A controversy had arisen between plaintiffs and Freeman because it was claimed by Freeman that he had not been dealt fairly with by plaintiffs, his agents, in connection with the proposed pending sale of real estate, in that the agents, without his knowledge, proposed to secure for their own benefit a price in excess of that which they represented to Freeman as being the consideration for the proposed sale. Freeman took up the negotiations from this point on his own behalf, and refused to recognize plaintiffs further in the matter, and completed the sale to the same parties, but upon different terms and conditions. Plaintiffs subsequently brought an action against Freeman to recover for alleged commissions earned on account of the sale of the latter's property, and in that action they were defeated; the court finding that they did not complete the sale of the property and were not entitled to any commission. Subsequently Freeman transferred the property described in plaintiffs' complaint by deed to the Inglewood Water Company, and they in turn sold some of it to defendant Lloyd. Plaintiffs never obtained possession of any of the lots described in their deed, and rents were collected and taxes paid by Freeman and his subsequent grantees continuously down to the time that this action was commenced, which was on September 21, 1906. In the answers of defendants it was denied that plaintiffs had any title to or interest in the lots, and it was further set up that there was a failure of consideration for the transfer of title, in that the property was intended to be given in payment of commissions to become due to plaintiffs and which in fact they did not earn. The defense of non-delivery of the deed was made also as an issue under the pleadings. The court found all of the facts in favor of defendants.

The finding of the court that the lots in question were to be deeded to plaintiffs as payment of commissions, which the court also found they did not earn, cannot be disturbed, for the reason that it is based upon conflicting testimony. Van Alstyne testified that the deed was by him requested to be given as a sort of additional compensation for services already rendered. Freeman testified that it was understood that the lots were to be given as compensation for services rendered for the consummation of the deal then pending, which contemplated the sale of his property to persons representing the Inglewood Water Company. It appeared also in testimony that plaintiff Stanton had testified at the trial had regarding commissions claimed to be due from Freeman, and while referring to the same deed, as follows: "If the deal went through, it [the deed] was coming to us; if the deal did not go through, it was to be delivered to Mr. Freeman. We had no desire to retain the deed." Proof of this statement was proper evidence of the understanding had regarding the consideration for the deed between the parties, and was corroborative of Freeman's statement that that consideration was payment of compensation for services rendered in completing the sale of his property. In Kenney v. Parks, 137 Cal. 531, 70 Pac. 557, it is said: "To constitute delivery of a deed, it is not sufficient that there be a mere delivery of its possession; but this act must be accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such [citing authorities]. Here both parties understood that the deed could have no effect until recorded; and there was therefore no intent that it should become immediately operative, or that it should ever become operative during the life of the grantor, or afterwards, unless the grantee should survive her." See, also, Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 281, 37 Pac. 939; Whitney v. American Insurance Co., 127 Cal. 467, 59 Pac. 897.

[3] In this case, the court having adopted the contention of defendant Freeman that the lots were to be transferred to plaintiffs in payment of commissions not then earned, and which were not thereafter earned, the inferential fact to be drawn therefrom, that the transfer of title, and consequently delivery of the deed, was not to be completed until such consideration had been fully executed, is sufficiently supported by the evidence. But, if we assume that there was a complete delivery at the time the deed was made and given to Van Alstyne, we think, under the issues made by the pleadings and the conclusion of the trial court thereon, that there was no consideration rendered by plaintiffs to defendant for the transfer of the lots, and plaintiffs were not entitled to have established any title in their favor. The consideration having totally failed, we do not think that it was essential that defendants should have here demanded, by cross-complaint, that the deed be delivered up and canceled by reason thereof, but that they might, as they did, defend against plaintiffs' asserted right to title and maintain the decree as it was entered in their favor.

[4, 5] Our conclusions on the questions we have discussed dispose of the vital matters involved, and it becomes unnecessary to consider the further points, of which there are a number, urged on behalf of appellants. The fact that defendants were in possession, by themselves and their predecessors in interest, and had paid all taxes levied against the property, for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action, would not establish adverse title in their favor, because such title could not have been adverse to plaintiffs prior to the time when Freeman left the deed with Van Alstyne. Prior to that time there could have been no right or claim of title to be asserted on behalf of plaintiffs. However, evidence of the fact that plaintiffs did not obtain or seek to take possession of the property for a long period of time, to wit, from November, 1902, until September, 1906, when they brought this action, was pertinent as a circumstance at least tending to corroborate the contention of defendants as to the understanding had at the time the deed was made.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 439

SPANGENBERG v. SPANGENBERG.
(Civ. 1,006.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1912.)

1. PLEADING (§ 214*)—COMPLAINT—DEMUR-RER.

A complaint must be deemed true for the purpose of determining its sufficiency as against a demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 525-534; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 82*) —
AGREEMENT BY HEIRS—CONSTRUCTION.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1655, 1656, 3529, providing that all things incidental to a contract or necessary to carry it into effect are implied therefrom, a contract between children for the equal distribution of the property which their father will leave on his death, notwithstanding any will to the contrary, executed during the lifetime of the father, in consideration of the love and affection which the children bear toward one another and their desire to avoid litigation over the estate of their father, makes distribution of the estate of the father, on his death testate, a necessary incident to the performance of the contract, and it contemplates that final distribution will be made within a reasonable time, and the refusal of a child appointed executor to apply for distribution when the estate is in a condition to be closed is a breach of contract, and gives another child a right of action for the sum stipulated and due thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 318-321; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

3. COURTS (§ 193*)—CONTRACTS—ENFORCE-MENT—JURISDICTION.

A contract between children, providing for the equal division of the estate which their father may leave on his death, notwithstanding any will to the contrary, is only an agreement by heirs apparent to ignore the will of the father on his death; and, though the contract is assumed to be in the nature of an assignment of an expectant interest, it is but an attempted conveyance by one who has no transferable interest in the property involved, and the determination of the rights under the contract is not within the jurisdiction of the probate court, but the only remedy available to a child is an action on the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 469, 471-475, 478; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

4. COURTS (§ 193*)—JURISDICTION—PROBATE
COURT.

The probate court, though having jurisdiction to determine the right to distribution of one claiming as an assignee of an heir, devisee, or legatee under a conveyance made subsequent to the ancestor's death, has no jurisdiction to adjudicate a claim to distribution of an assignee or grantee of an heir apparent under a conveyance made prior to the ancestor's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 469, 471-475, 478; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 108*) — INVALIDITY AS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

The right to make contracts will not be unduly restricted, and no agreement will be adjudged void, as against public policy, unless it clearly contravenes that which has been declared by statute or by judicial decisions to be public policy, or unless the agreement tends in some way to injure the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 498-503, 505, 507, 509-510½; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

6. CONTRACTS (§ 142*) — INVALIDITY AS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY—QUESTION FOR COURT.

Whether a contract is contrary to public policy is a question of law, to be determined from the circumstances of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1826; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

7. CONTRACTS (§ 108*) — INVALIDITY AS
AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

A secret contract between children, which provides for an equal distribution between them of any estate which their father may leave on his death, executed during the lifetime of the father, in consideration of the love and affection which the children bear toward one another, and their desire to avoid litigation over the estate of their father on his death, is not invalid, as contrary to public policy, but, if fairly made, will be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 498-503, 505, 507, 509-510½; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

8. CONTRACTS (§ 183*)—JOINT AND SEVERAL OBLIGATIONS.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1430, 1431, 1659, declaring that an obligation imposed on or a right created in favor of several persons may be joint, several, or joint and several, and such obligation or right is presumptively joint, except where the parties uniting in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, in which case their promise is presumptively joint and several, an obligation by several persons to pay several sums of money is several, and not joint, though the sum agreed to be paid by each makes up an aggregate sum; and where several distinct sums are by contract payable to several distinct persons, any one may sue separately for his share.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 750-785, 788; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

9. CONTRACTS (§ 183*)—JOINT AND SEVERAL OBLIGATIONS.

A contract between children, which provides for an equal distribution between them of any estate which their father may leave on his death notwithstanding any will giving one child more than an equal share, executed during the lifetime of the father, who dies testate leaving a child an estate in excess of an equal share, creates an obligation which is several, and any child may sue alone to enforce his right to an equal share.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 780-785, 788; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Fernando Spangenberg against Rudolph Spangenberg. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. J. Castelhun, for appellant. McKee & Tasheira, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover the sum of \$3,907.61, alleged to be due to him from the defendant by the terms of a contract whereby the plaintiff, the defendant, and four other children of one Ferdinand Spangenberg agreed, during the lifetime of their father, that if he "should die possessed of any property, and give, devise, or bequeath to any of said parties more or less than one seventh ($\frac{1}{7}$) of the total amount of the property given, devised, or bequeathed to all of said parties, then whatever property said parties, or any of them, received from said estate upon a partial or final distribution thereof shall be pooled and divided equally among said parties, share and share alike." The consideration for the contract was expressly stated to be the love and affection which the parties thereto bore toward one another, and their desire to avoid litigation over the estate of their father.

Ferdinand Spangenberg died in the city of New York on the 2d day of May, 1903, leaving a will bearing date the 2d day of May, 1902, wherein the defendant, Rudolph Spangenberg, of the city of Oakland, Cal., was nominated executor. On July 9, 1903, the Surrogate Court of the county of New York, in the state of New York, made an order admitting said will to probate, and appointing the defendant as executor thereof. The defendant qualified as such executor. Letters testamentary were issued to him, and he still is the qualified and acting executor of said will. At the time of his death the testator left surviving him seven children, all of whom, but one, Lavinia Spangenberg, were parties to the contract in controversy. In addition to several minor bequests to persons other than his children, the testator bequeathed to each of the six children who were parties to the contract, and all residents of the state of California, the sum of $4,000. The further sum of $4,000 was bequeathed to the defendant, Rudolph Spangenberg, and his sister, Isabella Paull, in trust, however, for Lavinia Spangenberg. All the rest, residue, and remainder of the testator's estate was bequeathed in equal shares to two of the parties to the contract, viz., Rudolph Spangenberg, the defendant, and Isabella Paull, a daughter of the deceased.

The total value of the estate of which the deceased died possessed and which came into the hands of the executor, amounted to $80,951.21, and, after deducting the costs and expenses of administration, there was paid, on partial distribution of said estate, to each of the six children who had entered into the contract in suit, the several sums of money specifically bequeathed to them. Upon partial distribution, there was also paid to the defendant, Rudolph Spangenberg, and his sister, Isabella Paull, the sum of $4,000 specifically bequeathed in trust for Lavinia Spangenberg. The defendant, as executor, has paid to said Isabella Paull her share of the residue of said estate, amounting to the sum of $23,445.66, which leaves in the hands of the defendant, as executor, the sum of $23,445.66, which will be paid over to him upon final distribution as his share of the residue of the estate.

For more than one year prior to the commencement of the present action the said estate has been ready for final distribution and in a condition to be closed, but for the purpose of evading the payment to the plaintiff of the amount alleged to be due to him under the contract the defendant has neglected and refuses to have final distribution of the residue of said estate made to himself. Plaintiff has, at different times, demanded of the defendant payment of the one-sixth of the residue of said estate to which it is alleged plaintiff is entitled under the contract, but the defendant refuses to pay the same to the plaintiff.

The foregoing is a substantial narrative of the facts alleged in the plaintiff's complaint to constitute his cause of action. The defendant interposed a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint upon all of the statutory grounds. The demurrer was sustained, with leave to the plaintiff to amend; but the plaintiff declined to amend, and accordingly judgment was rendered against him, from which he has appealed.

[1,2] In support of the judgment the defendant, among other things, contends that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this: That no breach of the contract sued on is shown. In this behalf the argument is made that the contract expressly requires, as a condition precedent to its performance, partial or final distribution of the estate of Ferdinand Spangenberg, and that until the happening of said condition no right of action on the contract exists in the plaintiff. In short, the defendant takes the stand that his agreement with the plaintiff and the other parties to the contract was merely to pool his share of the estate only when he received it, either by partial or final distribution, and that, inasmuch as he did not expressly agree to procure distribution of the estate, he is under no obligation to do so within any particular time, or at all, and that, until final distribution is had to him, he will have nothing to share with the plaintiff. The contract in question may be susceptible of the narrow construction here contended for by the defendant, but it will not be so construed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The complaint alleges, and for the purpose of the demurrer it must be taken as true, that the estate might have been closed and final distribution ordered in accordance with the terms of the will at the expiration of one year from the date of issuance of letters testamentary, and to construe the contract as the defendant would have it would leave the plaintiff without a remedy and at the mercy of the defendant for an indefinite period of time, and, perchance, would enable the defendant to altogether evade the obligation of his contract. For instance, if the defendant should assign his interest in the estate and procure distribution to be made to his assignee, the plaintiff, under the construction of the contract here contended for, could not maintain his action on the contract, because distribution had not been made personally to the defendant.

All things which in law or usage are considered as incidental to a contract, or necessary to carry it into effect, or to make it reasonable, "are implied therefrom, unless some of them are expressly mentioned therein," in which event "all things of the same class are deemed to be excluded." Civil Code, §§ 1655, 1656. Distribution of the estate of Ferdinand Spangenberg obviously was a necessary incident to a performance of the contract in controversy, and, although not specially mentioned therein, the contract impliedly contemplated that final distribution would be made within a reasonable time and without any unnecessary delay by the person who might be nominated and appointed executor of the will. The contract, therefore, should be interpreted so as to require the defendant, who was both a residuary legatee and executor under the will, to apply for and procure distribution to him of his share of the estate whenever the estate was in a condition to be closed, and his voluntary failure to do so cannot avail him in an attempted avoidance of his contract, because "that which ought to be done is to be regarded as done, in favor of him to whom, * * * and for whom, performance is due." Civil Code, § 3529.

If it be conceded, as the defendant contends, that distribution was a condition precedent to the performance of the contract, then it must follow that, if distribution had been made to the defendant, the plaintiff then would have had a cause of action for a subsequent refusal to perform the contract. The complaint alleges that, notwithstanding there was no obstacle in the way of closing the estate of Ferdinand Spangenberg, defendant purposely refrained from applying for distribution of the residue to him, in order that he might evade the obligation of his contract with the plaintiff. In other words, the defendant deliberately refused to do that which, in legal effect, he had agreed and was required to do. This we think was tantamount to a breach of the contract, and gave the plaintiff a right of action for the sum stipulated and due thereunder. Wolf v. Marsh, 54 Cal. 228; Love v. Mabury et al., 59 Cal. 484; Poirier v. Gravel, 88 Cal. 79, 25 Pac. 962; Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222; Bagley v. Cohen, 121 Cal. 604, 53 Pac. 1117; Moffitt v. Rosencrans, 136 Cal. 416, 69 Pac. 87.

[3] It is next claimed upon behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff, assuming that he has any existing rights under the contract, has not only mistaken his remedy, but the forum as well in which the wrong complained of can be righted. It is asserted that the plaintiff's remedy, if any he has, must be sought and applied in the Surrogate Court of the state of New York, where the estate of Ferdinand Spangenberg is pending in probate. It is conceded that, inasmuch as the plaintiff has, upon partial distribution, received the specific legacy bequeathed to him by the will, he has no longer any standing in that court as an heir, legatee, or devisee under the will sufficient to enable him to coerce the defendant into closing and distributing the estate. It is insisted, however, that the parties to the contract in controversy stand in the relation of "mutual assignees of each other" with respect to their several inherited interests in the estate of their father, and from this it is argued that the plaintiff, equally with the defendant, is in a position to compel distribution to himself, in the Surrogate Court of the state of New York, of such portion of the defendant's share in the estate as the contract calls for, and that it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to exhaust his remedy in the New York court before he will be heard to complain, in this action, of the defendant's neglect to close and distribute the estate.

In our opinion the contract in question cannot be said to be strictly an assignment or conveyance of the legal title of the defendant in and to any portion of his inherited interest in the estate of his deceased father. The contract does not purport, either directly or by implication, to assign any portion of the estate to the parties thereto. It is nothing more nor less than an agreement by heirs apparent to ignore the will of their ancestor; but, even assuming it to be in the nature of an assignment of an expectant interest, it was, as such and at best, but "an attempted conveyance by one who then had no transferable interest in the property here involved, and the determination of questions relating thereto is not within the scope of probate proceedings, and is not authorized by statute." Estate of Ryder, 141 Cal. 366-371, 74 Pac. 993.

[4] Assuming the contract to be nothing more nor less than a conveyance of the expectant interest of an heir apparent, the probate court in California, if the estate in question had been settled here, would not have had jurisdiction to determine the interest of plaintiff (if any) in the defendant's share of the estate. While our probate court has jurisdiction to consider and determine the right to distribution of a person claiming as an assignee of an heir, devisee, or legatee under a conveyance made subsequent to the death of the decedent, it has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the claim to distribution of the assignee or grantee of an heir apparent under a conveyance made prior to the death of the deceased. Estate of Ryder, supra. If it be true, as counsel concede, that the law of the state of New York is substantially the same as the law of the state of California upon the subject of assignments or conveyances by an heir apparent of an expectant interest in the estate of an ancestor, it must follow that the plaintiff would not be required, nor would he be permitted, to litigate his claim in the Surrogate Court in the state of New York, and in no event could he participate in the distribution of the defendant's share of the estate without the latter's consent. This being so, it is obvious that the only remedy available to the plaintiff is his present action on the contract.

[5, 6] The contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action, because the contract sued on is against public policy, and therefore void, is made here for the first time. It is to the interest of the public generally that the right to make contracts should not be unduly restricted, and no agreement will be pronounced void, as being against public policy, unless it clearly contravenes that which has been declared by statutory enactment or by judicial decisions to be public policy, or unless the agreement manifestly tends in some way to injure the public. Whether or not a contract in any given case is contrary to public policy is a question of law, to be determined from the circumstances of each particular case. Smith v. Du Bose, 78 Ga. 413, 3 S. E. 309-316, 6 Am. St. Rep. 260; Weber v. Shay, 56 Ohio St. 116, 46 N. E. 377, 37 L. R. A. 230, 60 Am. St. Rep. 743; Pierce v. Randolph, 12 Tex. 290; Printing Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, 19 L. R. Eq. Cas. 465.

[7] The contract in controversy is in effect but an agreement whereby the parties thereto, "because of their love and affection for one another" and being "desirous of avoiding litigation over the estate" of their father "in case of his death," agreed to ignore his will in the event that he made one, and then share his estate equally as if he had died intestate. In other words, the contract was but an agreement of heirs apparent not to contest the will of an ancestor.

There is nothing to be found in our code or statutory law prohibiting the making and enforcement of such a contract, and it has been held in this state that a contract, made after the death of the deceased, not to contest his will, is purely personal to the parties making it, that it is not against public policy, and that, when fairly made, it will be enforced. Estate of Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 38 Pac. 414, 32 L. R. A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134.

The case of Stringfellow v. Early, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 597, 40 S. W. 871, involved the enforcement of a contract between heirs whereby it was agreed that the will of an ancestor should not be probated, and that his estate should be divided among the parties to the contract in such proportions as they would be entitled to as heirs at law if the testator had died intestate. It was held in that case that such an agreement was not contrary to public policy, and that "such adjustments by contract are favored by the law * * * and are not to be deemed an unwarranted interference with the jurisdiction of the courts."

In the case of Phillips v. Phillips, 8 Watts (Pa.) 197, it was said: "It cannot admit of doubt that before probate the parties in interest under a will would have the right to set aside a will, and such an act would be favored when the object was to avert a family controversy." Clearly, if the contract in controversy had been made and executed subsequent to the death of Ferdinand Spangenberg, it could not have been successfully assailed and set aside, because it was violative of any law or principle of public policy, and we can see no difference in its effect upon the policy of the public, between a contract to refrain from contesting a will made during the lifetime of a testator and such a contract made after his death. The identical question involved upon this phase of the present case was decided adversely to defendant's contention here in the two cases of Beckley v. Newland, and Wethered v. Wethered, respectively reported in 24 Eng. Rep. 691 (2 Pierre Williams, 182), and 57 Eng. Rep. 757 (2 Simon, 183).

In all of their essential features of law and fact, these two cases are exact counterparts of the case at bar, and in each instance it was held that an agreement stipulating that whatever the sons, in one case, and the heirs presumptive, in the other, might receive by will, should be equally divided between them, was valid, enforceable, and not contrary to public policy. In those cases, as here, it was objected, in substance, that a contract by heirs, devisees, or legatees, made during the lifetime of the testator, to divide his estate, to which, at the time of the making of the contract, the parties had no manner of right, and possibly might never have, was a fraud upon the testator, who, in all probability, would not have bequeathed anything to any of the parties to the agreement, if he could have foreseen that his will would have been frustrated, by the act of the parties, immediately upon his death.

It was ruled, however, in the case of Beckley v. Newland, and subsequently reaffirmed in the case of Wethered v. Wethered, that "the agreement to share equally would not be disappointing the intent of the testator, for he did not design to put it out of either of the devisee's power to dispose of the estate after it should come to him; but, on the contrary, when the testator gave it to either of them, he, by implication, gave that person a power to dispose of the estate when it should come to him." It was further held in those cases in effect that inasmuch as the tendency of agreements similar to the one in question here was to guard against undue influence over the testator, and as it could not be said to be unreasonable to covenant to do what the law would have done if the testator had died intestate, the notion that they were contrary to the policy of the law was not supported by the principles of law applicable to such cases, and that performance of such contracts should be decreed, even though there was no other consideration for their execution than the reciprocal benefit which might accrue to the parties.

We are not unmindful of the many cases in this country and in England, cited to us by counsel for the defendant, declaring the invalidity of secret contracts made with strangers to the family of the testator, by his heirs, during his lifetime and without his knowledge and consent, purporting to convey an expectant interest in his estate. In all of the cases cited such contracts were declared void, primarily, for fraud upon the testator, and, secondarily, as being contrary to public policy, unless it was pleaded and proven that they were made and executed with the knowledge and consent of the testator. The reasoning of those cases proceeded upon the theory that such conveyances, if permitted, would perpetrate a fraud upon the testator, by diverting his bounty from his heirs to strangers, and such conveyances were declared to be contrary to public policy, because of their tendency to encourage extravagance, prodigality, and vice in the heirs, and, in some instances, a desire in an avaricious or vicious purchaser for the death of the testator.

The reasoning and the rule of those decisions do not apply, however, to contracts exclusively between heirs, legatees, or devisees, which have, as has the contract in the case at bar, the declared object of avoiding litigation and the implied purpose of suppressing fraud and undue influence. Where, as here, there was a fair, though a secret, agreement among all of the heirs of the testator to share his estate equally, the situation and the resulting rule of law are very different from that which obtains in contracts between an heir apparent and a stranger to the estate, for the reason that the agreement between the heirs would have the commendable "tendency to suppress all attempts of one or more to overreach the others, as well as to prevent all exertions of undue influence. * * * And it cannot be truly said to disappoint the testator's intention" nor contravene public policy. 1 Story's Eq. Jur. §§ 265, 343; Beckley v. Newland, supra; Wethered v. Wethered, supra.

It must be conceded that some of the cases cited to us by the defendant do involve and avoid contracts, similar to the one in the case at bar, which were made between heirs during the lifetime of the testator and without his consent. It cannot be disputed that those cases expressly decide and declare that a complaint which does not directly or impliedly plead the consent of the testator to such a contract does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Those cases, however, are the exception rather than the rule, and they fail to satisfy us that any principle of public policy, statutory or otherwise, in this state, at least, would be violated by the enforcement of the contract under consideration here.

[8] Finally, the defendant insists that the complaint is defective because of the non-joinder, as plaintiffs or defendants, of all of the other parties to the contract. This contention cannot be sustained. "An obligation imposed upon several persons, or a right created in favor of several persons, may be joint, several, or joint and several," and generally such obligation or right is presumed to be joint, rather than several, save and except in cases "where the parties who unite in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, whether past or present," and in such cases "their promise is presumed to be joint and several." Civil Code, §§ 1430, 1431, 1659. Where several distinct sums are by contract payable to several distinct persons, any one of the parties may sue separately for his share; and where several persons obligate themselves to pay several sums of money, their obligation is several, and not joint, notwithstanding that the sum agreed to be paid by each goes to make up an aggregate sum. Moss v. Wilson, 40 Cal. 159; Craig v. Fry, 68 Cal. 363, 9 Pac. 550.

[9] In the present case all of the parties to the contract presumably derived some benefit from the consideration for its execution, and as the plaintiff's cosigners of the contract, other than the defendant, could not possibly have any interest in the sum sought to be received from the defendant, his obligation under the contract must be deemed to be several, and a several action may be maintained thereon, without joining, either as plaintiff's or defendants, the other parties to the contract.

Upon the whole case, we are of the opinion that plaintiff's complaint is free from defect and states a cause of action, and that the defendant's demurrer thereto was improperly sustained. It is ordered, therefore, that the judgment appealed from be and it is hereby reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with instructions to overrule the demurrer and require the defendant to answer.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(19 Cal. App. 428)

BACON v. SOULE et al. (Civ. 1,001.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1912.)

1. FRAUD (§ 7*)—"CONFIDENTIAL RELATION"—"FIDUCIARY RELATION."

A. "confidential relation," with which a "fiduciary relation," is ordinarily synonymous, and like it is founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another, and precludes the idea of profit or advantage to the person in whom confidence is reposed from dealings with the other, is any relation existing between parties to a transaction whereby one of them is in duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1423-1424; vol. 3, p. 2761.]

2. FRAUD (§ 7*)—CONFIDENTIAL RELATION—PRESUMPTION—BROTHER AND SISTER.

A confidential relation is not presumed to exist between brother and sister merely because of their blood relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. FRAUD (§ 17*)—SUPPRESSION OF FACTS.

Fraud may be predicated on the suppression of a material fact; and, when a confidential relation exists, it is the duty of the person in whom confidence is reposed to fully and fairly disclose every material matter in his knowledge of which he knows the other is ignorant, failing of which he is guilty of fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

4. FRAUD (§ 50*)—PLEADING AND PROOF.

The burden of charging as well as proving fraud, actual or constructive, is ordinarily on the party claiming it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 46, 47; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

5. FRAUD (§ 41*)—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS—PLEADING.

Plaintiff does not show a confidential relation between defendants, his sisters, and him, by averring that he relied absolutely on their honesty and integrity and their natural love and affection for him, without alleging facts tending to show they voluntarily assumed towards him a relation of personal confidence; but, in fact, showing they had been for years at war, dealing with each other at arms' length.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

6 FRAUD (§ 7*)—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS—STOCKHOLDERS AND DIRECTORS—INDIVIDUAL TRANSACTION.

As to individual transactions between directors of a corporation and a stockholder thereof, in which the officers are not acting as representatives of the corporation, there is no confidential relation merely because of their relations to the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 8*)—ACTUAL FRAUD—PLEADING FACTS.

Actual fraud is not shown by the allegation that defendants "at all times fraudulently concealed from plaintiff the facts," this being a conclusion, and averments showing the facts and circumstances of the concealment being necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 12-28½; Dec. Dig. § 8;* Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 37.]

8. FRAUD (§ 17*)—FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT—SILENCE.

In the absence of a confidential relation, defendants in a transaction with plaintiff were under no obligation to volunteer to him information as readily accessible to him as them; so that their mere silence as to a matter not mentioned by him was not fraudulent concealment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Frank P. Bacon against Ella Etta B. Soule and another. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Berlin, for appellant. John A. Percy, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint without leave to further amend.

The cause of action stated in plaintiff's complaint sounds in damages for fraud and deceit alleged to have been practiced upon plaintiff by the defendants in the negotiation and consummation of an agreement whereby certain real property of the Bacon Land & Loan Company, Inc., was transferred to the plaintiff in lieu of his stock and interest in the corporation.

The salient features of the transaction out of which the controversy arose and upon which the plaintiff's cause of action purports to be founded are stated in the complaint to be these:

The plaintiff, Frank P. Bacon, is a brother of the defendants, Ella Etta B. Soule and Carrie J. Bacon. They, the plaintiff and defendants, were the owners in equal shares of the entire corporate capital stock of the Bacon Land & Loan Company, and at one time all three were directors and officers of the corporation. In the year 1895 the plaintiff resigned as the president and as a director of the corporation. The defendants, however, continued to be officers and directors of the corporation until it was dissolved in the year 1905. The dissolution of the corporation was brought about by the dissensions and disagreements and the constantly conflicting views and opinions of the plaintiff and defendants as to the proper management of the corporation, and from this resulted the agreement, which is the basis of this action, wherein the properties of the corporation were partitioned and transferred to the plaintiff and the defendants in lieu of the surrender and cancellation of their respective stock holdings in the corporation.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

This agreement was entered into and completely executed in the year 1905, whereupon the corporation was dissolved. Pursuant to the agreement, plaintiff selected and received, as a portion of his share of the assets of the corporation, a certain lot of land with a dwelling house thereon at the agreed valuation of $30,000. When plaintiff had last seen and examined the dwelling house some two years before, it contained fixtures and furnishings valued at $2,000, which he believed were still in place at the time he selected the property in question as a portion of his share of the corporation assets. The fixtures and furnishings, however, had been sold by the corporation and removed from the house by the purchaser some time prior to the consummation of the agreement between plaintiff and the defendants. This fact was not disclosed to the plaintiff by the defendants during the negotiations for the division and distribution of the corporation assets, and it was not discovered by plaintiff until three months later, and after he had accepted and received the property in question without having seen or examined the house or its contents for a period of two years.

The plaintiff in negotiating with the defendants "supposed and believed" that the house was fitted and furnished as when he last saw it, and in accepting the property without personal or any investigation of its condition and contents he relied "upon the honesty and integrity of his sisters and upon their natural love and affection" for him, never believing that they, "his nearest blood relatives, would defraud or impose upon him or in any way deceive him or conceal from him any fact relating to their dealings with each other."

The defendants, however, "allowed the plaintiff to accept the property" without disclosing to him that the fixtures and furnishings had been previously sold and removed, notwithstanding the fact that they knew that the plaintiff, when he agreed to accept the property at a valuation of $30,000, was acting under the "inducement and belief" that the house was in the same condition as to fixtures and furnishings as it was some two years before. It does not appear, however, that the defendants, either by words or artifice calculated to deceive, induced the belief in plaintiff that the property in question was in the same condition as when he last saw it, and it is not claimed or alleged that the defendants knew or had any reason, aside from their blood relationship, to suppose that the plaintiff was placing any trust or confidence in them in connection with this particular transaction.

Plaintiff's complaint, in part, proceeds also upon the theory that, because the plaintiff and defendants were stockholders in the corporation, they were business partners in the ordinary sense, and in that behalf the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was induced to accept the property in question without an investigation as to its condition or its fixtures or furnishings because of "his confidence in the defendants as his partners in the joint ownership of the large properties involved, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars."

It is further alleged that, if the fixtures and furnishings of the house had not been removed, the rental value of the house would have been $50 per month, but because of their removal the house could not be rented and remained vacant for a period of 18 months. Although the plaintiff had agreed to take the property in question at the valuation of $30,000, its actual market value at the time of its transfer to him was not more than $20,712 because of the removal of the fixtures and the consequent damage to the house. By reason of all this the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $10,188.

From the foregoing statement of the essential facts upon which the plaintiff's cause of action is founded, it is evident that damages are sought primarily upon the theory that a confidential or fiduciary relation existed between the plaintiff and the defendants because of their blood relationship, and because of the further fact that the defendants were officers and directors of a corporation in which the plaintiff was a stockholder, and that, therefore, the allegations of the complaint prima facie imposed a legal obligation upon the defendants to voluntarily disclose to the plaintiff the exact status of the corporation's assets before he had selected and received his share of the same. It is conceded that the complaint does not state a cause of action if the pleaded facts do not show actual fraud or do not actually, or as a matter of law, show the existence of a confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties with reference to the transaction out of which the controversy arose.

[1] The law relating to the subject of confidential relations has been so often declared and is generally so well understood that a mere reference to its underlying principles will suffice for the discussion and decision of the paramount point presented upon this appeal. A "confidential relation" in law may be defined to be any relation existing between parties to a transaction wherein one of the parties is in duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other party. Such a relation ordinarily arises where confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity of another, and in such a relation the party in whom the confidence is reposed, if he voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence, can take no advantage from his acts relating to the interest of the other party without the latter's knowledge or consent. A "fiduciary relation" in law is ordinarily synonymous with a "confidential relation." It is also founded upon the trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another, and likewise precludes the idea of profit or advantage resulting from the dealings of the parties and the person in whom the confidence is reposed. Civ. Code, § 2219; Meyer v. Reimer, 65 Kan. 822, 70 Pac. 869; Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 493. Confidential relations are presumed to exist between husband and wife, partners, parent and child, priest and parishioner, principal and agent, guardian and ward, counsel and client, etc., and in each of said relations the party in whom the confidence is reposed must stand in his dealings with the other party unimpeached of the slightest abuse of the confidence reposed, and, if he derives or claims any advantage from the relation, the law places upon him the burden of showing that the transaction out of which the advantage arose was fair and just and fully understood and consented to by the party confiding in him. Smith on Fraud, § 190; Robins v. Hope, supra; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Jackson v. Jackson, 94 Cal. 446, 29 Pac. 957; Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 Pac. 189.

[2] No such confidential relation, however, is presumed to exist between brother and sister merely because of their blood relationship. While it is true that the relationship of brother and sister is a material circumstance to be considered in determining whether or not in any given case a confidential relation actually existed, nevertheless the mere fact that the parties to the transaction are brother and sister does not in and of itself create a confidential relation. Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 352-356, 62 Pac. 555. This being so, it follows that plaintiff's cause of action in so far as it proceeds upon the claim of fraud, actual or constructive, arising out of a confidential relation, must rest upon the theory that the defendants did in fact voluntarily assume toward the plaintiff a relation of personal confidence as defined and contemplated by section 2219 of the Civil Code.

[3] Constructive fraud may be said to consist of (1) any breach of duty which, without an actual fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault by misleading another to his prejudice; or (2) of any such act or omission which the law specifically declares to be fraudulent without respect to actual fraud. Civ. Code, § 1573. The existence of actual fraud is always a question of fact, and may consist of any of the following acts committed by the party to the contract with the intent to deceive the other party thereto, or to induce him to enter into a contract, viz.: (1) The suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true; (2) the positive assertion in a manner not warranted by the opinion of the person making it of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true; (3) the suppression of that which is true by one having knowledge or belief of the fact; (4) any other act fitted to deceive. Civ. Code, §§ 1572-1574. It will thus be seen that fraud may be predicated upon the suppression of the material facts of a transaction. It may be inferred from the circumstances of the transaction and the condition of the parties, and when a confidential relation exists, either in fact or in contemplation of law, it is the duty of the person in whom the confidence is reposed to fully and fairly disclose every material matter within his knowledge of which he knows the other party to be ignorant. Failing to do so, the party in whom the confidence reposes is guilty of fraud and is liable in damages for the resulting loss to the other party. Belden v. Hendriques, 8 Cal. 87; Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 351, 23 Pac. 16, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137; Smith on Fraud, § 9; Smith v. Patterson, 33 Ohio St. 70.

[4] The burden of charging, as well as proving, fraud, actual or constructive, is ordinarily upon the party alleging it, and the sufficiency of the facts pleaded in the present case to constitute a cause of action depends upon whether or not the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint show that the defendants did in fact voluntarily assume a relation of personal confidence with the plaintiff which was subsequently betrayed in the transaction complained of.

[5] The only support for plaintiff's claim of the existence of a confidential relation is to be found in those allegations of the complaint wherein it is averred in substance that the plaintiff relied absolutely upon the honesty and integrity of his sisters, upon their natural love and affection for him, and upon his confidence in them as his partners.

Aside from the question of partnership, which will be dealt with and disposed of later, these allegations of the complaint were not sufficient to create a confidential relation within the meaning of section 2219 of the Civil Code. In and of itself the allegation that the plaintiff relied upon the honesty and integrity of the defendants merely because they were his sisters counts for naught in the creation of a confidential relation. In order to burden the defendants with the duties and responsibilities which ordinarily arise out of such a relation, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, not only to allege his trust and confidence in the defendants, but to aver, if he could truthfully do so, the existence of facts and circumstances showing, or tending to show, that they "voluntarily assumed" towards him "a relation of personal confidence." Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 Pac. 304. No such situation of the parties is alleged, nor can such a situation be fairly inferred from the associations and dealings of the parties prior to the time and at the time that the contract in controversy was executed. Not only is the complaint silent upon this subject, but it affirmatively appears therefrom that there was no love lost between the plaintiff and his sisters. "They were never able to agree upon any harmonious line of action." The constant conflict between them in matters of business was so sharp and disagreeable that the plaintiff was compelled some 10 years before the transaction complained of to resign as a director of the Bacon Land & Loan Company, and thereafter was practically excluded by the defendants from any participation in the management of its affairs.

In addition to this, it further appears from the allegations of the complaint that about three years prior to the execution of the contract in controversy the plaintiff was compelled by the defendants to give up his residence in his father's home. It does not appear from the complaint that the plaintiff ever thereafter saw the defendants, or that he ever thereafter had any personal communication or dealings with them whatsoever. Thus it appears from the complaint in its entirety that for at least a period of 10 years prior to the transaction in question the plaintiff and his sisters were at war and dealing with each other at arms' length; and that finally, because of the hostile attitude of the defendants, the plaintiff was compelled to segregate his interest from theirs. Surely in such a situation it cannot be fairly claimed that there existed between the plaintiff and the defendants any mutual love and affection or trust and confidence. In short, while the plaintiff alleges generally that he had confidence in his sisters, "he shows specifically that he had not." Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663-675, 47 Pac. 691, 695.

[6] The plaintiff, as hereinbefore indicated, relies in part, to support his claim of a confidential relation, upon the theory that he and the defendants were partners. The complaint, it is true, alleges that the plaintiff in negotiating the settlement of the corporation's affairs relied "upon his confidence in the defendants as his partners." It, nevertheless, appears clearly enough from the complaint as a whole that the plaintiff and defendants were not and never had been partners in the ordinary sense of the term. The claim of a confidential relation in this behalf is founded solely upon the erroneous assumption that, because the plaintiff was a stockholder and the defendants directors of the same corporation, the defendants were therefore partners of and trustees for the plaintiff in all matters and transactions arising between them, whether in or out of the corporation. This position is untenable. It may be conceded that generally the director of a corporation is a trustee for the corporation and its stockholders in the management of the corporation's affairs, and in the disposition of its property, but "the doctrine that officers and directors are trustees of the stockholder applies only in respect to their acts relating to the property or business of the corporation. It does not extend to their private dealings with stockholders or others, though in such dealings they took advantage of knowledge gained through their official position." 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 898; 2 Cook on Corporations (6th Ed.) § 640. In the case at bar it is apparent that in dealing with the subject-matter of the controversy the defendants were not acting in any manner as the representatives of the corporation. On the contrary, they as individuals were dealing with the plaintiff as an individual in a transaction purely personal to each of them, and therefore their respective duties and obligations to one another must be measured by the rules relating to the ordinary transactions of individuals rather than by those which pertain to and govern the conduct of officers of a corporation in the management and control of the corporation's affairs and property.

[7] The complaint is barren of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for actual fraud. The nearest approach to a statement of actual fraud is the allegation that the defendants "at all times fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff the fact" that the corporation had previously sold the fixtures and furnishings of the house selected by the plaintiff as his share of the corporation assets. This, however, was not enough to fasten a charge of actual fraud upon the defendants. It was at best but a conclusion of the pleader, and facts showing actual fraud must be averred. In the absence of averments showing the facts and circumstances of the concealment alleged to have been practiced upon the plaintiff, the complaint "must be held to be as destitute of allegations of fraud as if it were entirely silent upon the subject." Kent v. Snyder, 30 Cal. 667; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Semple v. Hagar, 27 Cal. 163; Green v. Hayes, 70 Cal. 767, 11 Pac. 716. No claim is made that the plaintiff was acting under a mental disability or that the defendants misrepresented anything to him, or misled him to his detriment in any particular, or in any manner prevented him from investigating and ascertaining for himself the true condition of the property allotted to him.

[8] In the absence of a confidential relation, the defendants were under no obligation to volunteer information to the plaintiff which was as readily accessible to him as it was to the defendants, and as "the law will not undertake the care of persons who will not, with the means at hand, take care of themselves," the mere silence of the defendants cannot be construed to be a fraudulent concealment sufficient to support an action for fraud. Commissioners v. Younger, 29 Cal. 172-176; Hanscom v. Drullard, 79 Cal. 234-237, 21 Pac. 736; Champion v. Wood, 79 Cal. 17-20, 21 Pac. 534, 12 Am. St. Rep. 126; Ruhl v. Mott, supra.

The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(19 Cal. App. 488)

OAKLAND PAVING CO. v. DONOVAN.
(Civ. 928.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, July 16, 1912.)

1. OFFICERS (§ 40*)—DE FACTO OFFICERS—EXISTENCE.

There can be no de facto officer where there is no de jure officer provided by law, or where the de jure officer is discharging his functions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

2. OFFICERS (§ 104*)—DE FACTO OFFICERS—EFFECT OF ACTS.

The lawful acts of an officer de facto, so far as the rights of third persons are concerned, are, if done within the scope and by the apparent authority of the office, as binding as if he were an officer legally elected and qualified and in full possession of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 147*)—SUPERINTENDENT OF STREETS—DE FACTO OFFICERS.

Though a city charter provide for a superintendent of streets, but not for an acting superintendent, one who discharged the functions of that office during the superintendent's absence, and who was recognized by the public as such officer, was a de facto officer, regardless of any power to appoint him, and his acts concerning a street improvement are valid, as concerning the right of a paving company to enforce an assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 324, 325; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

4. OFFICERS (§ 39*)—"DE FACTO OFFICER"—DEFINITION.

A "de facto officer" is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid, so far as they involve the interest of the public or third persons, where the duties of the officer were exercised, first, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people without inquiry to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such as ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public; fourth, under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law, before the same is adjudged to be such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1845-1851.]

5. OFFICERS (§ 41*)—DE FACTO OFFICERS.

Finding a person in charge of a public office and transacting its business in a regular way, under an assumption of right to act as the officer charged with the duties of such office, third parties are not bound to ascertain his authority so to act, but as to them the courts will hold him to be an officer de facto, and will not permit his title to be collaterally assailed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by the Oakland Paving Company against Robert T. Donovan. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Johnson & Shaw, for appellant. W. J. Donovan and R. M. F. Soto, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action was commenced to enforce a street assessment lien for work done in the city of Oakland under the so-called Vrooman act (Stats. 1885, p. 147, and acts amendatory thereof previous to 1904). The resolution of intention was adopted March 7, 1904, and the work was done pursuant to contract duly let, as appears from the complaint and is not denied. It is further alleged in the complaint that the superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland made, issued, and recorded the assessment roll, authenticated the record thereof, and recorded the return on the warrant. The answer denied that the superintendent of streets did any of the acts so alleged to have been performed by him, and at the trial defendant had judgment, from which, and the order denying its motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

We take, from appellant's opening brief, the following statement, which correctly shows, in part, what occurred at the trial: "Plaintiff offered, but was not permitted to introduce in evidence, a warrant, assessment, and diagram, made and signed by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland, which were recorded by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent of streets of said city, in a book kept by the superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland in his office for that purpose. Plaintiff also offered in evidence a contractor's return, which was filed in the office of the superintendent of streets, and recorded therein by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent of streets, and an original contract, upon which the assessment was based, which was recorded by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent ent of streets, in a book kept by the superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland, in his office for that purpose, and said record was signed by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent of streets. Plaintiff introduced in evidence a resolution, adopted by the board of public works of the city of Oakland on August 16, 1905, granting Charles F. Ott, superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland, a leave of absence for 60 days. Plaintiff then offered, but was not permitted to introduce in evidence, a resolution of the board of public works, to show that on said 16th day of August, 1905, said board of public works of the city of Oakland appointed W. W. Blair acting superintendent of streets for and during the time the said Charles F. Ott was absent from the city of Oakland, and by said appointment authorized and appointed said W. W. Blair to do and perform all acts and things required by law of the superintendent of streets to be done and performed, and such other acts and things as may be required of him by the general laws of the state of California and the charter of the city of Oakland. Plaintiff then called and examined witnesses, who were not permitted by the court to answer questions: (1) As to whether or not Charles F. Ott was in possession of the office of superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland, and performed the duties of the office at any time during the period in question; (2) as to whether or not W. W. Blair was in the actual possession of the office of superintendent of streets and performed all the duties of the office during all of the time of the period in question; (3) as to whether or not said W. W. Blair was reputed to have official authority to exercise and perform the duties of the superintendent of streets of the city of Oakland; (4) as to whether or not the community accordingly acquiesced."

The acts performed by Blair were done at dates within 60 days after August 16, 1905. The trial was commenced on January 8, 1910, and W. W. Blair testified that he had been connected with that office for over 5 years; that a sufficient certificate was made and signed by the city engineer, describing the work performed by plaintiff, which was indorsed at the foot: "Recorded September 6th, 1905. W. W. Blair, Acting Superintendent of Streets of the City of Oakland." The usual certificate of assessment and diagram were similarly certified on the same date. A warrant, made and signed in the same manner, of like date, countersigned by the mayor of the city of that date, was also produced; also a contractor's return, "Recorded October 4, 1905," all attached to each other. It was admitted by defendant's counsel that the book offered in evidence by plaintiff was a book, coming from the superintendent's office, "which is used for the purpose of recording assessments, and another book, which is used for the purpose of recording the contracts and bonds," and that in these books "were copied the papers that you have offered in evidence, and are authenticated by Mr. Blair in some capacity; that the return thereon is on file, and the record is in the hands of Mr. Ott. I admit all the papers have been copied in the book. I don't mean they are recorded there, copied as a matter of fact, and that the record purports to be signed on October 4, 1905." The offer of the books and other documents was objected to, and objection sustained, on the ground that the documents therein appearing "purport to be authenticated and in fact were authenticated by W. W. Blair, acting superintendent of streets, and that he has no authority to authenticate said record." It was further admitted by the attorney for defendant "that the ordinary course of business was pursued, save whatever was done was done by Mr. Blair, purporting to act as acting superintendent of streets, and was authenticated in the usual way, except that the record purported to be authenticated in the same capacity as the other instruments." It thus appears that plaintiff complied in all respects with the law, except that his documents were authenticated by one who was assuming to act as superintendent of streets, in the absence of the duly appointed and qualified superintendent.

The objection to the introduction of these documents and the evidence offered went to the authority of Blair to perform the duties of superintendent of streets. In ruling on this objection the learned trial judge said: "It will have to be sustained, on the theory that he was not an officer, and did not have the authority. That is all I pass upon." The resolution of the board of public works granting a leave of absence to Mr. Ott recites that he is superintendent of streets, and we understand it to be an admitted fact that he was such officer at the time. Appellant rests its claim that the court erred in refusing the offered evidence on the proposition that, if not an officer de jure, Blair was an officer de facto, and that evidence tending to prove that he was superintendent of streets de facto, acting under color of title, was admissible to show that his acts were valid as far as the public and third persons are concerned.

The position taken by respondent may be thus summarized: "That unless the Vrooman act controls, the authority to create the office of acting superintendent of streets, such office being a municipal affair, reposes in the city council" (Oakland Freeholders' Charter, §§ 73, 195, 199, 201, 204; Stats. 1889, p. 513); that if the city charter is inadequate to control the situation, the Vrooman act (section 34, subd. 8) confers the power to appoint a superintendent of streets upon the city council (Stats. 1885, pp. 147, 164); that the charter of the city provides that, if a vacancy occur, it shall be filled by the appointment of the mayor (section 202, Stats. 1889, supra); that there is but one office, filled by an incumbent de jure—Blair being purely a private individual in all that he did as acting superintendent of streets. Hence all the acts of Blair in his assumed official capacity were nullities. Finally, respondent dismisses the contention that Blair was an officer de facto with the statement that "he did not claim to act as superintendent; for he could not do so, since there was an incumbent of the office de jure. Blair assumed to act only as acting superintendent, and by virtue of the supposed appointment of the board of public works, which was absolutely without authority. Hence Blair was not, as he could not be, acting under color of authority. There was, moreover, no office of acting superintendent."

Appellant contends, and section 73 of the Oakland charter (Stats. 1889, p. 540) provides, that the board of public works shall have authority to appoint the superintendent of streets, and requires him to keep a public office, in which shall be kept the records of his office and a register of all streets accepted by the city, and he shall have power to perform the duties required of that officer by the so-called Vrooman act of 1885 and amendatory acts; that the power is given the board to remove such officer and appoint another to perform the duties of his office. It is undisputed that there was, at the time involved, a superintendent of streets de jure, then on leave of absence; that there was no such officer known to the Oakland charter, or to the general law, as an acting superintendent of streets; nor was there any provision of law, so far as we know, authorizing such officer to act in the absence or inability of the superintendent. Provisions for filling a vacancy apply to vacancies created by death, resignation, and removal from, or expiration of the term of, office. They do not apply to temporary absences from duty. The sole question, then, is whether, in view of the circumstances, the principle under which the acts of officers de facto are held to be valid, as affecting the public and third parties, should be applied in the present case.

This principle is of very ancient origin, and, as administered in England and in this country, the rule does not materially differ. In some early English cases it is said that, in order to constitute one an officer de facto, it is necessary that his claim to the office should be supported by some form of color of an election, and these cases have had some following in the United States. But in a later English case Lord Ellenborough defined an officer de facto to be "one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law" (R. v. Bedford Level, 6 East, 356); and Mr. Mechem says: "This definition has, in substance, been adopted by the majority of the cases, and the necessity for a color of election has not been affirmed so far as the rights of third persons are concerned." Mechem on Offices and Officers, §§ 317, 318. See Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) vol. 8, pp. 815, 816. State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409, is a leading case, frequently cited with approval. Said Butler, C. J.: "The de facto doctrine was introduced in the law as a matter of policy and necessity, to protect the interests of the public and individuals, where those interests were involved in the official acts of persons exercising the duties of an office without being lawful officers. It was seen that the public could not reasonably be compelled to inquire into the title of an officer, nor be compelled to show a title, and these became settled principles in the law. But to protect those who dealt with such officers when apparent incumbents of offices, under such apparent circumstances of reputation or color as would lead men to suppose they were legal officers, the law validated their acts as to the public and third persons on the ground that, as to them, although not officers de jure, they were officers in fact, whose acts public policy required should be considered valid."

[1] Two different persons cannot, at the same time, be in actual occupation and exercise of an office for which one incumbent only is provided by law. If the officer de jure is in, i. e., is performing the duties of the office, there is no room for an officer de facto. And it is also true that there can be no officer de facto where no officer de jure is provided by law. There may be officers de facto, but cannot be an office de facto, under a constitutional government.

[2] The lawful acts of an officer de facto, so far as the rights of third persons are concerned, are, if done within the scope and by the apparent authority of the office, as binding as if he were an officer legally elected and qualified and in full possession of it. Mechem's Offices and Officers, § 322 et seq.

[3] In the case now here, the office, the duties of which for the time were being performed by Blair, existed. The evidence offered tended to show that Blair was in full possession of this office in the absence of the officer de jure, was performing that officer's duties admittedly within the scope of the office, was holding himself out to the world and was reputed to be legally exercising these duties, was in charge of the books and records of the office, and, to every appearance, was the superintendent of streets, acting as such and so recognized by the public, and in fact the officer he represented himself to be. It seems to us that, if the facts were such as the offered evidence tended to establish, the plaintiff had a right to deal with Blair as authorized to act as superintendent of streets, and his acts as such should be given validity. It was error, therefore, to refuse the offered evidence.

The rights of plaintiff are not to be made to depend upon the power of the board of public works to appoint Blair as acting superintendent of streets, but rather upon the facts as they existed at the time with reference to the execution of the duties of the office of superintendent of streets as plaintiff found them to exist and being performed. Plaintiff was not required to investigate Blair's title or authority to act in the capacity in which he was assuming to act. It was sufficient for plaintiff that it found him in possession of the office and all its records, invested with its insignia, being treated and regarded by the public as rightfully performing the duties of the office. State v. Barnard, 67 N. H. 222, 29 Atl. 410, 68 Am. St. Rep. 648.

[4] The definition given by Chief Justice Butler, in State v. Carroll, supra, has met with the very general approval of the courts as perhaps the most comprehensive yet given. He said: "An officer de facto is one whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid so far as they involve the interest of the public or third persons, where the duties of the officer were exercised: First, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such as ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public; fourth, under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law, before the same is adjudged to be such."

This definition embraces the case of an officer assuming to act, under the circumstances stated, "without a known appointment or election"; and it also embraces the case of an officer acting, as here, under color of a known appointment, void, it may be admitted, "because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body." The validity of the appointment cannot be the true test; for if the appointment be valid, the appointee would be an officer de jure. The very purpose of the doctrine is to protect the public and third persons where officers are assuming to act as such without strict legal right, and there is an appearance or color of title, but which is in fact no title.

[5] Where, without opposition, the duties of an officer are notoriously discharged by a person in an official capacity, the public apparently acquiescing and those in authority approving, these circumstances give rise to an appearance of right imparting official reputation, upon which third parties are justified in regarding such person as an officer. Finding a person in charge of a public office and transacting its business in a regular way under an assumption of right to act as the officer charged with the duties of such office, third parties are not bound to ascertain his authority so to act; but as to them the courts will hold him to be an officer de facto and will not permit his title to be collaterally assailed. Nofire v. United States, 164 U. S. 657, 17 Sup. Ct. 212, 41 L. Ed. 588; Gonzales v. Ross, 120 U. S. 605, 7 Sup. Ct. 705, 30 L. Ed. 801; McDowell v. United States, 159 U. S. 596, 16 Sup. Ct. 111, 40 L. Ed. 271; Susanville v. Long, 144 Cal. 362, 77 Pac. 987; Petersilea v. Stone, 119 Mass. 465, 20 Am. Rep. 335. Numerous other cases to like effect might be cited. The subject will be sufficiently expounded in the following cases: State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 9 Am. Rep. 409; Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Or. 456, 15 Pac. 778, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176; Jewell v. Gilbert, 64 N. H. 13, 5 Atl. 80, 10 Am. St. Rep. 357.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

19 Cal. App. 475

McLAIN v. DAHLSTROM METALLIC
DOOR CO. et al. (Civ. 1,087.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California, July 16, 1912. Rehearing Denied Aug. 14, 1912; Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 13, 1912.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 258*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—COMPLAINT.

A complaint in an action for personal injury to an employé, which alleges that the injury was occasioned by reason of defendant's negligent acts performed through a foreman, sufficiently charges the negligence of the employer, and the designation in the complaint of the agent through whose acts the negligence arose does not affect the sufficiency of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 816-836; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 279, 277*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a finding that plaintiff, suing defendant for a personal injury, was at the time of the injury an employé of defendant, and that the negligence causing the injury was committed by a vice principal of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-975, 978-980, 953; Dec. Dig. §§ 279, 277.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—VICE PRINCIPAL.

Where the vice principal of a contractor to erect the interior finish of a building in process of construction, instructed an employé, in charge of the men while at work, to direct the men to use a temporary elevator placed in the building by an independent contractor as a substitute for a staging, and one of the men, while obeying the order, was injured because of defects in the elevator, observable by casual inspection, the employé was the vice principal of the employer, who was liable for the injuries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 973-975, 978-980; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 116*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—SAFE APPLIANCES.

A contractor to erect the interior finish of a building, and to furnish all scaffolding necessary for use in the work, must furnish reasonably safe scaffolding for his employés in the performance of the work, and where he negligently fails to do so he is liable for injuries to an employé occasioned by defective scaffolding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 207; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 514*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY.

An expert may testify as to the proper kind of a knot necessary to properly tie ropes by which an elevator, for use as a staging by employés, was sustained, to afford reasonably safe protection for the employés.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2319-2323; Dec. Dig. § 514.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. A. McLain against the Dahlstrom Metallic Door Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. George M. Harker and George E. Overmyer, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action for personal injuries; plaintiff alleging that the same were occasioned through the negligence of defendant, and while he was an employé of defendant, and were received in the course of his employment. It appears from the record that defendant entered into a contract with the owners of a building in the course of construction in the city of Los Angeles, through which it agreed to furnish material and labor to prepare and erect all interior trim, sash and metal frames, and work of kindred nature, which contract forbade the subletting of any part of the work without the architect's consent; that by the terms of the contract defendant was to furnish and pay for all scaffolding, staging, etc., necessary for use in the construction work, and should personally superintend the work, keeping a competent foreman direct from the factory on the job. This contract was never assigned. One Bedell negotiated, with reference to the contract entered into by defendant, with the owners and thereafter assumed charge of the superintendence of the work. Through Bedell plaintiff was employed, and his injury was occasioned by reason of a defective elevator furnished as an appliance or place upon which to work. The direction to use such appliance came from one Fickes, a foreman employed upon the job, and under whom plaintiff was working. This injury was of a serious character, permanent in its nature, and the amount of $6,000, assessed by the verdict against appellant alone, was in no sense excessive, upon the assumption of defendant's liability in any respect. From the judgment rendered upon such verdict, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order refusing to vacate the judgment, defendant appeals.

[1] The first point made by appellant is that the complaint is insufficient, in that no averment is made therein of negligence upon the part of defendant. We think there is nothing in this point. It is alleged that the injury was occasioned by reason of defendant's negligent acts performed through a foreman. The designation of the agent or servant through whose acts the negligence arose does not detract from the force of the charge that defendant's negligence occasioned the injury.

[2] It is next claimed that there is no evidence tending to show that the superintendent, through whose direction the elevator was used, was a vice principal of defendant, or that plaintiff was an employé of defendant. Whether or not plaintiff was an employé of defendant depends upon the relation which Bedell bore to defendant. We find some evidence in the record which, in our opinion, tends to show that Bedell was recognized as, and was in fact, an agent and servant of defendant. It is true that defendant introduced evidence tending to show that, when Bedell was ostensibly negotiating the contract on behalf of defendant, he was in fact an employé of a San Francisco firm; that this firm, after the execution of the contract, and without the architect's knowledge or consent, and without the assignment or subletting of the contract, undertook the work of erecting in the building the material which by the terms of the contract defendant was to furnish. There is, however, other evidence which shows that this San Francisco firm, in receiving payments due under the contract, signed receipts therefor as agents of defendant. There is other evidence that notices posted about the building were to the effect that defendant was doing the work of erecting and putting in place the material so by it contracted to be furnished. There was no foreman directly from the factory, unless Bedell be such individual. These posted notices above referred to were signed by Bedell as contracting agent of defendant. If the San Francisco firm did undertake any independent contract, they did it in violation of the terms of the written agreement of defendant, secretly and without the knowledge of any employé, or of the owners of the building. The court very properly instructed the jury that the verdict must be for defendant, unless it found from the evidence that plaintiff was employed by Bedell, acting as agent of defendant, with authority in that regard, and was injured in the course of his employment, and, further, that if defendant permitted and turned over the work to be performed by Bedell, or the persons whom he represented, as subcontractors, and that such subcontractors had the full control, direction, and performance of said work, and the mode of doing the work, on their own account, and were not acting as the agents and servants of defendant in the performance of defendant's contract, and that in the performance of said work they alone employed the plaintiff, then the jury were instructed to find in favor of defendant. They were further instructed that, if they believed from the evidence that the San Francisco firm were acting merely as the agents of defendant in the erection of said work, and not as independent contractors, then that would not relieve the defendant as contractor for the erection of said work. These questions of fact, generally and under special interrogatories submitted, were found by the jury against defendant, and we are not prepared to say that there is nothing in the evidence supporting such implied findings and the answers to such special interrogatories. There are circumstances connected with the case which might well lead the jury to regard with disfavor the claim that the San Francisco firm were in fact independent contractors. The fact that defendant wired Bedell certain instructions during the construction was not without significance; that the payments were made to defendant, either directly or by their written order; that checks issued by Bedell in paying the men had thereon the initials of defendant's company, and the secrecy sought to be thrown around the transaction, all no doubt tended to satisfy the minds of the jurors that defendant in fact was the contractor, and that the San Francisco firm's relation thereto was but one of agency. There being, therefore, sufficient testimony in support of the verdict in the regard stated, we cannot, under the rule, disturb the same.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] The elevator, a temporary one, and the defective character of which occasioned the accident, had been placed in the building by other independent contractors before defendant commenced the performance of its contract. Fickes, the foreman, is shown to have had charge of the men while at work, purchased tools to be used in connection with the work, directed the men what to do and how to do it, and with reference to the use of this elevator had special instructions from Bedell. The elevator was attempted to be used as a staging, for the reason that the staging formerly in use in connection with the particular work about to be done was insecure and inconvenient, and Fickes, under Bedell's instructions, directed the use of this elevator as a substitute for the staging theretofore in use. The ropes by which the elevator was suspended were insecurely tied, a fact which might have been observed by casual inspection, and an opportunity for which was afforded Fickes before the use of the elevator was attempted. Under this state of facts, Fickes became a vice principal in connection with the direction to use said staging. It matters not that he performed manual labor in addition to exercising his general powers as foreman. In so far as he possessed authority to direct the use of appliances, the duty to provide which devolved upon defendant, he represented the defendant. Nixon v. Selby Smelting Co., 102 Cal. 463, 36 Pac. 803.

[4] It is of no material consequence that the elevator was in place before Fickes detected its use. This direction to use it was not with the knowledge or consent of those who constructed the elevator, nor of the owners of the building, and such parties were in no respect, as affecting such use or the disastrous results which followed, joint tort-feasors. The duty of furnishing scaffolding and staging under the contract was upon defendant, and it was bound to furnish reasonably safe appliances suitable for the purpose intended. We see no error in the action of the court in refusing to instruct the jury that the direction to use the elevator in question came from a fellow servant.

[5] The defect connected with the elevator was occasioned by the manner in which certain knots were tied, and we see no impropriety in permitting expert testimony as to the proper kind of a knot necessary under the circumstances to afford reasonably safe protection in connection with the use of the elevator. The matter of tying knots in such a way as to prevent slipping and accident certainly requires skill, and it could scarcely be presumed that a jury would understand the technical matter involved, and for that reason we think it was proper to call witnesses expert in such matter, and to permit them to give an opinion as to the safe or unsafe condition of the elevator with reference to such knots, and the weakness apparent from an inspection, if had.

Reading all of the instructions of the court together, we see no merit in the criticism with reference to instruction No. 7. We think it a correct statement of the law, and in no sense objectionable, as omitting any question in connection with the authority to furnish the appliance. We have examined the instructions criticised, and see no merit in such criticism, especially when we consider the instructions as a whole.

Numerous errors are specified with reference to the admission of evidence. We see, however, no error in connection therewith, nor in any action of the trial court in any matter in connection with the admission of evidence, or of its conduct or statements in the presence of the jury, prejudicial to defendant, or of such erroneous character as would justify a reversal of the judgment.

A careful examination of the entire record satisfies us that the verdict was a proper one, and the judgment and orders appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

163 Cal. 597

WOLF et al. v. ÆTNA INDEMNITY CO. OF
HARTFORD, CONN. (S. F. 5,867.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 26, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where, in an action on a building contractor's bond in the penal sum of $4,000, the complaint alleges the contractor's abandonment of the work and the completion thereof by the owner at a cost of $12,000 over and above the contract price remaining unpaid, a general finding that each of the allegations of the complaint is sustained by evidence and is true, and that each of the denials and allegations in the answer of the surety is not sustained by evidence and is untrue, supports the judgment for $4,000.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 927-934, 939; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 161*)—DISCHARGE OF SURETY—PREMATURE PAYMENTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a building contractor's bond based on the contractor abandoning the work, evidence held to support a finding that partial payments made by the owner to the contractor were not prematurely made under the contract stipulating for partial payments as the work progressed, and the surety was not released from liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 439-441; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 114*)—DISCHARGE OF SURETY—PREMATURE PAYMENTS—EVIDENCE.

Where money was due a building contractor under the contract, payment thereof by the owner to the creditors of the contractor with the latter's consent freely given did not release the contractor's surety from liability on the ground that the payment was not made to the contractor himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-243; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 161*)—ACTION ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a building contractor's bond, based on the contractor abandoning the work, evidence held to justify a finding that the owner expended a specified sum in the completion of the work over and above the contract price remaining unpaid, authorizing a judgment against the surety in the penal sum of the bond which was less than the amount so expended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 439-441; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence and supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

6. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 161*)—ACTION ON CONTRACTOR'S BONDS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a building contractor's bond, evidence held to justify a finding that there was no substantial difference between the building erected and the building called for by the plans and specifications, and the surety was liable on the bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 439-441; Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

7. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 100*)—BUILDING CONTRACTOR'S BOND—DISCHARGE OF SURETY—ALTERATIONS IN PLANS.

A surety on the bond of a contractor to erect a building under a contract permitting the owner to request alterations which should not void the contract, but the amount of the alterations should be added to or deducted from the contract price, and that on the demand of either the contractor, owner, or architect the valuation of all changes should be fixed in writing, is not released from liability because of alterations in the building increasing the cost in a trifling sum as compared with the contract price, though the character and valuation of the changes were not agreed on and fixed in writing for want of demand by the contractor, owner, or architect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 162-165; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

8. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 155*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS—BONDS—ACTIONS—PLEADINGS.

Where an owner sues on the bond of a contractor to erect a building under a contract permitting alterations without making the contract void, because of the abandonment of the work by the contractor and the completion thereof by the owner at a cost in excess of the contract price remaining unpaid, he need not allege alterations made before the contractor abandoned the work, and the complaint referring to the contract is not bad for failing to refer to the small changes in the plans during the progress of the work by the contractor, and is sufficient to justify a recovery against the surety for the damages caused by the contractor's breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. § 422; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action on a building contractor's bond, the court found, on sufficient testimony, that a payment by the owner to a third person was in fact a payment to the contractor, the sustaining of an objection to the question asked the owner on cross-examination, as to whether he did not make a payment to the third person instead of to the contractor, was not prejudicial error.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4187-4193, 4207; Dec. Dig. § 1056.*]

10. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 160*)—BUILDING CONTRACTOR—ACTIONS ON BOND—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a contractor's bond based on his abandonment of the work, evidence of the amount of bids received by the contractor for the mill, marble, tile, and glass work, and for the cornice and sheet metal of the building, was incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 436-438; Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

11. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 160*)—BUILDING CONTRACTOR—ACTIONS ON BOND—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a building contractor's bond based on the contractor abandoning the work, which was completed by the owner at a cost in excess of the amount due under the contract, evidence that a third person, after the contractor ceased work, submitted an offer to do the work necessary to complete the building for a sum much less than the sum the owner incurred in completing the work, was incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 436-438; Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Hyman Wolf and another against the Ætna Indemnity Company of Hartford, Connecticut. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. F. Hatton and H. F. Peart, both of San Francisco, for appellant. A. A. Sanderson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action on a bond given by B. W. Lattimore, as principal, and the Ætna Indemnity Company of Hartford, Conn., a corporation, as surety, in the penal sum of $4,000, given upon a building contract. Lattimore, who was a party defendant, defaulted. The case was tried as between plaintiffs and the surety defendant, and judgment was given in favor of plaintiffs and against the surety and Lattimore for $4,000. This is an appeal by the surety from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

[1] The complaint alleged the making of the building contract by plaintiffs (the owners) and Lattimore, a copy of which (exclusive of the plans and specifications according to which the building was to be built) was annexed, the giving by Lattimore and the surety of the bond in suit, a copy of which was also annexed, that Lattimore began work under the contract and was paid in accord with the terms of the contract on account of the contract price of $16,000, the first, the second, and third payments, aggregating $8,- 500; that on or about July 20, 1908, he, without fault on plaintiffs' part, ceased and abandoned work under the contract, and refused to go on therewith; that plaintiffs notified the surety thereof and demanded that it assume and complete the contract as provided in its bond, but that it refused to do so; and that thereafter plaintiffs proceeded to complete such contract and did complete it in accord with the terms thereof at a necessary cost of $12,000. It was further alleged that Lattimore had failed to keep said building free and clear of claims of lien, claims to the extent of $2,000 having been recorded and being charges against the same; but on the trial plaintiffs introduced no evidence on this score and waived all claim against the surety on account thereof. The trial court adopted, probably because the findings were so prepared by counsel, the unsatisfactory method of finding simply generally "that each and all of the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint are true and are sustained by the evidence and that each and all of the denials and allegations in the answer of the said defendant the Ætna Indemnity Company are untrue and are not sustained by the evidence." Clearly, in the respect just mentioned there is no evidence to sustain the findings, but, of course, this fact is immaterial if the findings are sustained in all other respects. The amount of the bond, and consequently the amount of the judgment, is only $4,000, which is less than the amount alleged to have been necessarily expended by plaintiffs in the completion of the contract, over and above the amount of the contract price remaining after making the three alleged payments to Lattimore.

[2] It is claimed that the second and third payments by plaintiffs to Lattimore were prematurely made, and that the evidence was insufficient to support a contrary conclusion, with the result that the surety should be held discharged from liability. The contract provided in regard to the first three payments that the first payment, $3,000, was to be made "when entire concrete foundation walls are in and second-story floor joists are laid"; the second payment, $3,000, "when entire frame is up, building inclosed and roof on"; and the third payment, $2,500, "when entire building is brown coated." It was expressly provided therein: "That when each payment or installment shall become due, and at the final completion of the work, certificates in writing shall be obtained from the said architect, stating that the payment or installment is due or work completed, as the case may be, and the amount then due; and the said architect shall at said times deliver said certificates under his hand to the contractor, or, in lieu of such certificates, shall deliver to the contractor in writing, under his hand, a just and true reason for not issuing the certificates, including a statement of the defects, if any, to be remedied, to entitle the contractor to the certificate or certificates." The three payments were made respectively April 18, 1908, May 3, 1908, and June 20, 1908. Each was made on the certificate of the architect, stating that the same was due to the contractor. It is claimed that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a conclusion that at the time of the second payment the building was "inclosed" within the meaning of the contract; the provision of the contract as to this payment being "when entire frame is up, building inclosed and roof on." The entire frame was up and the roof on at such time. There was ample evidence to sustain a conclusion that the sides and rear elevations were covered with the sheeting paper and rustic called for by the specifications, and that the Oregon pine sheeting called for on the front elevation had been put on. The plans and specifications required that rustic or ship-lap should be put on the front elevation over the pine sheeting, and this had not been done, at least entirely, at the time of the second payment. Although the plans and specifications were in evidence in the lower court, they are not contained in the record on appeal, and we have no means of determining whether their provisions would throw any light upon the question what is meant by the term "building inclosed" in the provision that we have quoted from the contract, except so far as the testimony of Lattimore and the architect assist in that regard. Lattimore testified substantially that the "plans and specifications" required that the front should have both sheeting and rustic on at the time of such payment. There was no dispute that the specifications called for both sheeting and rustic on the front, and we think it is clear that this requirement is the whole basis of Lattimore's testimony that both should be on before the second payment should become due, for we know that neither plans nor specifications would ordinarily contain any provision as to the times when payments shall be made. On the other hand, the architect testified most positively that all the payments "were made in conformity with the plans and specifications and the terms of the contract." This was tantamount to saying that the building was "inclosed" within the meaning of the contract at the time of the second payment. With sufficient evidence as to the actual condition to warrant a conclusion that the sides and rear elevations were fully covered by rustic, and the front elevation by the Oregon pine sheeting, we are satisfied that it must be held there was enough in the testimony of the architect to sustain a conclusion that the building was "inclosed" within the meaning of that word as used in the contract, at the time of the making of the second payment. It is not disputed that the entire building was "brown coated" at the time the third payment was made; the objection as to such payment being the same as that in regard to the second payment, viz., that the building had not then been "inclosed." What we have said in regard to the second payment disposes of this objection. There is nothing in Bacigalupi v. Phoenix Building & Construction Co., 14 Cal. App. 632, 112 Pac. 892, in conflict with our conclusion herein.

[3] It is further claimed that the finding that the third payment was made to Lattimore is not sustained by evidence. This claim is based on the fact that the amount thereof ($2,500) was divided among various subcontractors, materialmen, and labor claimants. There was ample evidence to sustain the conclusion that these amounts were so paid in the presence of the contractor, and with his consent freely and voluntarily given, he putting his "OK" on each of said claims and giving his receipt to the plaintiffs for the full amount. In their reply brief, counsel for appellant practically admit that these facts are conclusive against the contractor, but seem to contend that the surety's rights were infringed upon by the payment to creditors of the contractor on this building, instead of to the contractor himself. But clearly this cannot be so. The money was due the contractor under the terms of the contract, to be paid to him or to whomsoever he chose to designate, and when plaintiffs paid it in accord with his expressed consent, freely given, the plaintiffs paid it to him.

[4, 5] It is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to support the conclusion that in order to purchase the necessary material and pay for the necessary labor to complete the contract, after it was abandoned by Lattimore, plaintiffs were obliged to expend and did expend the necessary sum of $12,000. After the contractor had failed to go on with his contract, and the surety, after notification of his default, had failed to proceed with the work, as required by its undertaking, plaintiff proceeded with the work by day's labor without making any effort to secure a contractor to complete the contract. They employed a superintendent who purchased all necessary material and employed the necessary labor. Vouchers were presented for all expenditures, and the total cost of completion according to the plans and specifications, including cost of superintendence, was shown to have been $12,628.31. There is no claim that this amount was not actually expended in the completion of the contract. Admittedly, the testimony of the superintendent was to the effect that this expenditure was reasonable and necessary. Opposed to this was the testimony of several witnesses, as to their opinions of the amount necessary to complete the contract; one of them putting such amount at $7,491. The greatest difference between the amounts actually expended and those testified to by defendant's witnesses appears to have been in the matter of labor. So far as the item of mill work is concerned, the amount expended appears to have been less than any of the estimates. Undoubtedly, the testimony of these witnesses created a substantial conflict on the question, and it may be that if we were discharging the functions of a trial judge herein our conclusion as to the reasonable cost of completing this contract would differ from that of the learned trial judge. But we are satisfied that it cannot be held that his conclusion is not sufficiently supported by evidence. The evidence is not such as to compel the conclusion that the cost would have been less had bids been called for and a contract awarded for the completion of the work.

[6] The plans and specifications showed a building 120 feet in depth by $27\frac{1}{2}$ feet in width. Two witnesses for defendant, each of whom was a surety on an indemnity bond given to the surety company in this matter, testified that according to a measurement they made of the building after its completion it was 121 feet 7 inches in depth. They testified that the measurement was made with a tapeline 50 feet long. The contractor gave no testimony on this point whatever, and there is nothing to indicate that anybody had any idea that a longer building was being constructed than that called for by the plans and specifications until such measurement was made by these witnesses. In fact, at the time of the giving of the testimony, the allegation in this regard was that the building erected was about two feet less in length than was provided for by the plans and specifications, and the answer was amended after the giving of such testimony. The testimony of witnesses for plaintiffs was positive to the effect that no change in the plans and specifications was ever suggested by anybody in this regard, and also that the building was constructed exactly according to the plans and specifications. If there was any difference in this respect, it was evidently due solely to a mistake of those engaged in doing the work, without knowledge on the part of plaintiffs or their agent that there was any departure from the plans and specifications, and we do not see how such a situation could affect the liability of the surety. But after an examination of the testimony on this matter, we do not feel that we would be warranted in holding that there is not sufficient support in the evidence for the conclusion of the trial court that there was no substantial difference, so far as depth was concerned, between the building as it stood on the ground and the building called for by the plans and specifications.

[7] The building contract contained the following provisions in regard to alterations, etc.:

"Eighth. Should the owner or the architect, at any time during the progress of the work, request any alterations or deviations in, addition to, or omissions from, this contract or the plans or specifications, either of them shall be at liberty to do so, and the same shall in no way affect or make void this contract; but the amount thereof shall be added to, or deducted from, the amount of the contract price aforesaid, as the case may be, by a fair and reasonable valuation. And this contract shall be held to be completed when the work is finished in accordance with the original plans, as amended by such changes, whatever may be the nature or extent thereof.

"Ninth. The rule of practice to be observed in the fulfillment of the last foregoing paragraph (eighth) shall be that, upon the demand of either the contractor, owner or architect, the character and valuation of any or all changes, omissions, or extra work, shall be agreed upon and fixed in writing signed by the owner or architect and the contractor, prior to execution."

The following changes or departures in the plans and specifications were made by the contractor, Lattimore, in the doing of the work, after the character and valuation thereof had been agreed upon and fixed in writing, signed by the owners and the contractor, viz.: An extra stairway to basement apartment and more storage room to rear, for $50; changes and extra work involving seven extra clothes closets and labor thereon, $150. These changes being authorized by the contract and being made in the manner provided in the contract, the liability of the surety cannot be held to have been affected thereby.

Certain other changes are claimed by appellant to have been made by the contractor at the request of the owner, at an aggregate cost of $130, without compliance with the provisions of the ninth paragraph of the contract, which is quoted above, and it is contended that such departure from the contract had the effect of releasing the surety. It was shown that certain changes were made, the testimony being such as to force the conclusion that a change was made in the location of a door in the basement, before it was framed in, and that 12 windows in kitchens were raised 6 inches, the size of the windows not being changed. It was also shown that there was certain extra work in taking up floors that had been laid to allow the plumber to put in the gas outlets, but there was no departure from the original plans and specifications in the completed work in this regard. There was testimony that the increased cost by reason of these various items was $30 for the basement door change, $50 for the raising of the windows and $50 for the flooring work. As to none of these things was any writing signed by any of the parties.

It may be conceded that material changes in the plans and specifications not expressly authorized by the contract, or material changes authorized by the contract, made by the parties without following a particular method prescribed therefor by the contract, made without the knowledge or consent of the surety, would operate to discharge the surety on the bond of the contractor. But the difficulty with defendant's position here is that the building contract expressly authorized the making of such changes (see eighth paragraph above quoted), and the ninth paragraph, upon which it bases its claim, is applicable only where "contractor, owner or architect" demands the agreement or written statement showing the character and valuation of the "changes, omissions or extra work." The language of the provision is clear and explicit and admits of no other construction. The contract authorized such changes, and required a previous agreement and statement in writing as to value and character only when the same was demanded by one of the parties named, contractor, owner, or architect. It may be that it was very unwise for the surety company to become surety on a contract drawn in this way, but that it is bound by the provisions of the contract we cannot doubt. The cases cited by counsel for appellant in this connection are all cases where there was a plain departure from the express terms of the contract in the matter of changes. It follows that there was no discharge of the surety on account of these changes.

We do not understand that any claim is made for a deduction from the amount of the judgment on account of the cost of these changes. If the whole amount thereof, together with the amount agreed upon as to the value of changes agreed on in writing, which would make an aggregate of $330, were to be charged against plaintiffs, it would still leave them entitled under the findings to more than $4,000, the amount of the bond and the judgment thereon.

[8] It is contended that, even if all the changes were made in the manner provided for in the contract, "nevertheless the contract as changed should have been pleaded," and that as the complaint makes no mention of any such changes—alleges no modifications—it in fact alleges a "different contract" from that followed in doing the work, and cannot serve as a basis of recovery in this action, and the judgment must be reversed. This claim is based on the case of People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 136 Cal. 55, 68 Pac. 576, which, it must be conceded, gives much support to the contention of appellant. But we are satisfied that the general rule upon which that case was decided, to the effect that the pleader can recover only upon the contract alleged and not upon some other and different contract, does not require a reversal under such circumstances as exist here. This action was upon the bond given by appellant. The only changes shown as to the contract between the owners and the contractor were the changes from the original plans and specifications already noted, as to which, as we have already seen, the contract expressly provided that "the same shall in no way affect or make void this contract, * * * and this contract shall be held to be completed when the work is finished in accordance with the original plans, as amended by such changes, whatever may be the nature and extent thereof."

There was no new or substituted contract between the contractor and the plaintiffs by reason of such changes from the plans and specifications. The action was one for damages caused by the breach of the original contract, whereby the contractor had in effect agreed to construct the building according to the plans and specifications as they were at the time of the execution of the contract, amended by such changes as might be made in such plans and specifications by the parties during the progress of the work. The few small changes in the plans and specifications noted had all been made by the contractor before he ceased work upon the building, and the alleged default of the contractor was solely in the matter of failing to go on with the work and complete the building, so that such changes were entirely immaterial as far as the matters involved in this action are concerned. It is therefore easy to understand why the framer of the complaint, in referring to the contract, made no reference to the fact that in certain small details the plans and specifications had been changed during the progress of the work by the contractor, and we are unable to see how such an allegation was at all necessary.

The cases cited in the opinion in People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, supra, as authorities sustaining the conclusion there reached, have no proper application to such a case as this. In Victor S. M. Co. v. Scheffler, 61 Cal. 530, the case principally relied upon, the action was upon a bond given to secure the faithful performance of his contract as an agent of the Victor Sewing Machine Company by one Lonsdale, to whom sewing machines were to be shipped on consignment for sale. There was no provision in the contract for any modification or change in the terms of the contract; but the surety in his bond agreed that certain changes might be made without affecting his liability. The contract between Lonsdale and the sewing machine company was subsequently changed in such a manner as to make a new and different contract between them, and the difference between the terms of the old and the new contract was such, it was held by this court, as was not permitted by the terms of the bond, with the result that the surety was discharged. The complaint was based squarely on the first or old contract and charged a breach thereof alone, and the court further held that, even if the change in terms had not been such as to release the surety, still plaintiff could not recover in that action brought for breach of the original contract, "since plaintiff proved that the original contract had ceased to be in force prior to the alleged nonperformance of its conditions by Lonsdale." In Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867, the action was for a commission for negotiating a loan; a written contract being alleged which was annexed to the complaint. Performance on his part of this contract by the plaintiff was alleged. The evidence showed affirmatively that the plaintiff had not performed his part of such contract. The court said: "We think that the plaintiff failed to prove the case set forth in his complaint. * * * The evidence, therefore, did not show performance of the contract set forth in the complaint. And if the contract of the defendant amounted to a modification of the contract, it should have been declared on as modified." O'Connor v. Dingley, 26 Cal. 11, was an action in general assumpsit for work and labor, by a building contractor who had entered into a written contract with the owner which had been materially deviated from and modified during the progress of the work by common consent. The material question in the case was whether, under our practice act, the exception existing at common law to the general rule requiring a party to a special contract which remains open and unrescinded to sue in special assumpsit on the contract and forbidding a suit in general assumpsit, to the effect that where the special contract has been deviated from or modified by common consent and the service has been performed, the party claiming compensation must sue in general assumpsit, was still in force. It was held that it was not, that the action must be upon the contract as modified, and that the general allegation in the complaint "that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff for work and labor," etc., was not a statement of the cause of action shown by the evidence.

We think it obvious that none of these cases is applicable to such a case as is here presented, and that the objection of appellant, based on the authority of People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, supra, is without merit. In so far as the opinion in the latter case is opposed to our conclusions, it is overruled.

[9] There was no prejudicial error in sustaining the objection to the question asked plaintiff Hyman Wolf on cross-examination, whether he did not pay $250 of the third payment to the Doe Lumber Company instead of to the contractor. That he did so was fully shown by all the evidence, the only question being whether he did so under such circumstances as to make it, in fact, a payment to the contractor. This the court found on sufficient testimony was the fact.

[10] The objections to questions asked the contractor (Lattimore) as to the amount of certain bids received by him for the mill work, the marble and tile work, the glass work, and for the cornice and sheet metal on this building were properly sustained. The proposed evidence was incompetent.

[11] For the same reason, the trial court properly sustained an objection to the question asked witness John Coughlin, as follows: "After Mr. Lattimore ceased working on that building, did you submit an offer to do all the work necessary to complete the building for the sum of $1,500?"

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(163 Cal. 630)

SMITH v. SMITH. (L. A. 2,861.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 500*)—SUFFICIENCY OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS FOR REVIEW.

Where a bill of exceptions does not indicate any ruling of the court or any exception registered on behalf of an appellant, the reviewing court cannot pass on possible errors of law committed at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2295-2298; Dec. Dig. § 500.*]

2. MARRIAGE (§ 50*)—EXISTENCE OF STATUS.

In an action for divorce, evidence held to show that the parties were never married.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-89; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Minnie Abbott Smith against I. H. Smith. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George A. Boden and John F. Poole, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Clement L. Shinn and Hutton & Williams, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for a divorce upon the grounds of adultery, willful desertion, and failure to provide. The alleged adultery consisted in the defendant's living with one Isabella Keating, whom he had married after the date of the marriage with plaintiff averred in the complaint, and with another woman whom he had wed after the death of said Isabella. Defendant answered, admitting his marriage to Isabella Keating and to another woman following the former's death, but denying that he was ever married to plaintiff. The court found in favor of defendant, and decreed that he and plaintiff were never husband and wife. This appeal is from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. No appeal is prosecuted from the judgment.

[1] Plaintiff's bill of exceptions fails to indicate any ruling of the court or any exception registered on her behalf. We cannot therefore pass upon any alleged errors of law committed at the trial.

[2] The specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the decision (erroneously described as "the verdict" by the notice of motion and in the bill of exceptions) were entirely too general, but nevertheless we have carefully examined the record, and find that the court's conclusions were amply sustained by the evidence. There were conflicts of testimony. The case is not one, as appellant asserts that it is, in which the marriage of plaintiff and defendant was proven without material conflict. It was shown without contradiction that on February 4, 1889, defendant, who was then 18 years of age, secured a license to marry plaintiff. She testified that this was followed by a marriage ceremony performed by a justice of the peace. It was admitted that no record of any such marriage had ever been filed. Defendant testified that he secured the license for the purpose of showing it to plaintiff's mother in order that the latter might leave home, but he denied that any marriage ceremony had ever been performed, or that he and plaintiff had ever intended to live together as husband and wife. He admitted that they had meretriciously cohabited for several years, and that two children (one of them since deceased) had been born to plaintiff during that period. One of these children, now a married woman, whom he acknowledged at the trial as his offspring, testified as a witness for her father that in 1908 her mother had said she did not know whether she was married to Smith or not. Other witnesses contradicted plaintiff with reference to the supposed marriage ceremony, and corroborated defendant's account of the reason for which the marriage license was secured. An effort was made to prove a common-law marriage supported by evidence of cohabitation and repute, and certain witnesses testified that defendant had at different times introduced plaintiff as his wife. Other witnesses, however, stated that soon after the alleged marriage in 1889 plaintiff was working in a place called the "Club Theater," where she was known as "Minnie Abbott." She admitted that in 1890, she entered a house of prostitution at San Bernardino as an inmate, and that she was either a prostitute or the owner of a house of ill fame from October, 1890, to August, 1907. One witness, formerly a peace officer in San Bernardino, testified that plaintiff was known as "Minnie Abbott" during 17 years of her life in that city. Other witnesses corroborated this testimony, and plaintiff herself did not deny it. She introduced certain letters and postal cards written by defendant and sent to her at various times in 1905 and 1906. One of these was signed "Your old hubby, Zeck," but all of them that showed formal direction for transmission by post were superscribed "Miss Minnie Abbott." Plaintiff said upon cross-examination: "From a time prior to August, 1907, until the day before I filed this suit, I lived with Pete Laird as his wife and went under the name of Mrs. Laird." In view of this sort of testimony we are somewhat surprised at the contention of counsel with respect to the absence of "substantial conflict" in the evidence relating to the alleged marriage.

The order from which the appeal is taken is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(163 Cal. 579)

CONTINENTAL BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N
v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, DE-PARTMENT NO. 1, et al. (S. F. 6,310.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 22, 1912.)

1. BANKRUPTCY (§ 56*)—"BANKRUPT."

A "bankrupt" is one who, by his acts and conduct, affords evidence of his inability to pay, or his intention to avoid payment of, his debts; and within Bankr. Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 546 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3422]) § 3, defining acts of bankruptcy, a person guilty of any of such acts is a bankrupt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-65, 67, 68, 86-96; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 700-701; vol. 8, p. 7587.]

2. BANKRUPTCY (§ 9*) — NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY ACT—POWERS OF STATES.

The national bankruptcy act does not prohibit the state from preventing a corporation from conducting business for acts without the contemplation of bankruptcy, and to take control of the affairs of the corporation, terminate its business, and pay its creditors; and where the state does so for acts not within the bankruptcy act the proceedings are not in bankruptcy, merely because the procedure adopted is identical with that in case of bankruptcy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-9; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

3. BANKRUPTCY (§ 9*) — NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY ACT—POWERS OF STATES.

Building and Loan Commissioners Act (St. 1911, p. 607), creating a bureau of building and loan supervision, providing for the appointment of a building and loan commissioner, and for the appointment of receivers of corporations violating the law, or conducting business in an unsafe manner, is a bankruptcy act, in so far as it provides that procedure shall be taken against a corporation which is insolvent; but it contains provisions foreign to the bankruptcy act, and where a state court finds that a corporation is bankrupt, within the bankruptcy act, further proceedings must be had in the bankruptcy court; but where the corporation is not a bankrupt, but is accountable for non-compliance with the law, the state court may proceed in conformity with the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-9; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

In Bank. Application for prohibition by the Continental Building & Loan Association against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Department No. 1, and the Judge presiding, to restrain proceedings in a case. Denied.

Gavin McNab, B. M. Atkins, R. P. Henshall, and A. H. Jarman, all of San Francisco, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an application for writ of prohibition directed to the respondents above named, restraining them from proceeding further with the case of the People of the state of California, upon relation of George S. Walker, against the Continental Building & Loan Association.

The ground for the application is that the court is proceeding without and in excess of its jurisdiction. The reasoning upon which this ground is based is that the states have surrendered to the general government the power to pass "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States"; that Congress has passed such a law (1 Fed. Stats. Ann. Supp. 1912, p. 464; Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418]); that ex proprio vigore this statute suspends the operation of all state bankrupt or insolvency laws; that the state law under which the Superior Court is proceeding, known as the "Building and Loan Commissioners Act" (Stats. of California 1911, p. 607), is such a bankrupt or insolvency law. If these positions are well taken, the conclusion for which petitioner contends is irresistible, for it is conceded that petitioner is a corporation conducting a business which brings it within the scope and purview of the national bankruptcy act; and it is unquestioned that when the general government has spoken upon the subject of bankruptcy the operation of all state laws upon the same subject-matter is suspended. The ultimate question, then, is whether, under these concessions and admissions, there is still left in the state law any valid provisions entirely without the scope of the national bankruptcy act, which provisions may be enforced by the state courts, or whether, as petitioner earnestly contends, the state law is as a whole, and without severable or separable parts, a single bankruptcy or insolvency act.

[1] Preliminary to this consideration, since the states, out of their plenary powers of sovereignty, have conferred upon the United States the power to pass "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy" only, it is proper, if not necessary, to consider who, within the meaning of this grant of power, is a bankrupt, or what is bankruptcy. Philologically and historically, a bankrupt is but a broken bank or bench. Such bank or bench, or "counter," as we would in this day designate it, was the bench over which the money lender, trader, or merchant transacted his business; and it was broken for or by him as an evidence of the discontinuance of his business. At English law at the time of the adoption of our Constitution, the meaning of the word was usually limited to persons engaged in trade, in one form or another, who did certain acts affording evidence either of an inability to pay their debts, or of an intention to avoid such payment. Other persons not engaged in trade, and who showed a like disposition to avoid, or a like inability to meet, their obligations to their creditors, were ordinarily called insolvents. By definition in the last federal bankruptcy act, insolvents, as well as bankrupts proper, are included, and the only persons exempt from the operation of the present national law are "wage-earners" and "persons engaged chiefly in farming or tillage of the soil." Whether or not this is an extension of the common-law definition of a bankrupt, and is justifiable, is not a matter of present interest. A bankrupt, then, being as defined a person who, by his acts and conduct, affords evidence of his inability to pay, or his intention to avoid payment of, his debts, it is quite within the scope of the bankruptcy act to define the acts or omissions of the debtor which shall afford prima facie or conclusive evidence of bankruptcy. This the national bankrupt act has done. Section 3 declares:

"Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having

"(1) Conveyed, transferred, concealed or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or

"(2) Transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors;

"(3) Suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or

"(4) Made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a state, of a territory, or of the United States; or

"(5) Admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground."

Bankruptcy proceedings are primarily designed for the protection of the creditors, and have for their principal object the payment of the debts of the bankrupt, and to this end the distribution of his assets ratably amongst his creditors under equitable principles. Secondly, though not necessarily, such acts usually contemplate the relief and discharge of the debtor upon full disclosure of his property and compliance with the law. The court in bankruptcy simply marshals the assets of the debtor and distributes them, having regard to the preferences created by law. All other proceedings, such as the dissolution of attachments, the barring of non-presented claims, and the like, are mere incidents, which may or may not be found in a bankruptcy act, and which, if not found, in no sense affect its construction as a bankruptcy act.

[2] Even so far as this consideration has proceeded, it must be clear, we think, that a person is a bankrupt, within the meaning of the federal statute, only when he has been guilty of one or another of the forbidden acts whose commission stamp him as a bankrupt. It does not at all follow that the state, for good reasons of its own, may not prevent a person or corporation from conducting business, and in so preventing it take control of its affairs, terminate its business, and pay its creditors for acts entirely foreign to and absolutely without the contemplation of bankruptcy. And if the state does this thing for acts not within the contemplation of the bankruptcy law, it is futile to argue that, because the procedure which it adopts for the payment of creditors is similar to or identical with the procedure adopted in case of bankruptcy, therefore the proceedings are in bankruptcy. To illustrate: It is competent for the state to declare that if a corporation shall lend any money to one of its directors its charter shall be forfeited, its business cease, its affairs be wound up by the state courts, and its creditors paid, and that the provisions of the law and the machinery applicable to proceedings in bankruptcy shall, one and all, be applied in such a case. This does not make the proceeding one in bankruptcy. Indeed, the corporation may be concededly solvent, prosperous, and in all respects conducting a safe and conservative business; but it has violated the law, and as a consequence of its violation has forfeited its right to do business. Having forfeited this right, it becomes necessary that its business affairs should be wound up and its creditors paid. And certainly the state has the right to direct the method or methods by which this shall be done. If further elucidation of this proposition, which seems so plain, be considered necessary, it will be found in the answer to this question: Could a corporation be decreed a bankrupt in the bankruptcy courts of the United States under a state law which declared that its charter should be forfeited, its business cease, and its affairs be wound up if it lent money to its directors? There can be but one answer to this question. The federal statute does not contemplate that a bankruptcy can arise by any such act. Yet, upon the other hand, it is certainly within the sovereign power of the state to decree that such an act shall work the forfeiture of a charter, and to provide for the termination of the company's business and the payment of its debts.

[3] So we are brought to the ultimate question in this consideration: Is the state statute above referred to simply a bankruptcy act, the whole operation of which is suspended by virtue of the federal statute; or, conceding it to be in part a bankruptcy act, is it something different as well? That it is a bankruptcy act in the sense that it contemplates and provides that procedure shall be taken against a corporation which is insolvent admits of no doubt. Indeed, section 13 of the act provides for punishment of the commissioner if, "having knowledge of the insolvent condition * * * of any such association, corporation or society," he neglects or refuses to perform his official duty. The act itself contemplates that under these proceedings the insolvency of the corporation may be disclosed, and prescribes the duties of the court and commissioner if such insolvency is found to exist. But, upon the other hand, the law also contemplates that for other acts amounting to neither bankruptcy under the federal law, nor to insolvency in its general definition, the state may either check the practices of such a corporation until it ceases them and reforms its business methods, or it may terminate the business absolutely, not because of bankruptcy nor insolvency, but to protect the public against practices which may lead to such results. Again, the law contemplates that the same procedure shall follow if such an association violates "the provisions of its charter or the laws of this state provided for its government." And here, as in the instance above cited, a corporation may subject itself to state intervention and control for one or another of these violations, which may have nothing to do with and no bearing whatsoever upon the question of its bankruptcy or insolvency. All this is made plain by section 9 of the act, the opening paragraph of which is the following:

"If the commissioner, as the result of any examination, or from any report made to him or to the shareholders, shall find that any association, corporation or society licensed by him is violating the provisions of its charter, or of the laws of this state provided for its government, or is conducting its business in an unsafe or unauthorized manner, he may, by an order addressed to the association, corporation or society so offending, direct a discontinuance of such violations or unsafe practices and a conformity with all the requirements of law; and if such association, corporation or society shall refuse or neglect to comply with such order within the time specified therein; or if it shall appear to the commissioner that any such association, corporation or society is in an unsafe condition, or is conducting its business in an unsafe manner, such as to render its further proceeding hazardous to the public or to those having funds in its custody; or if he shall find that its assets are impaired to such an extent that, after providing for all liabilities other than to shareholders, members and investors, they do not exceed in volume the dues or principal payments paid in by the shareholders, members and investors and credited to or on account of all classes of stock, shares, or certificates of investment, issued and outstanding, he shall, in order to prevent waste and diversion of assets, assume and take charge of the affairs and business of such association, corporation or society and possession and control of all its property and assets, and retain such possession pending action by the proper court. Upon taking such action, he may, under his hand and official seal, appoint a custodian, require from him a good and sufficient bond, and place him in charge as his representative. He shall immediately notify the Attorney General of his action and of all the necessary facts in connection therewith; and thereupon it shall become the duty of the Attorney General to at once apply to the superior court of the county in which such association, corporation or society has its principal place of business, for an order citing such association, corporation or society to show cause, if any it may have, within not exceeding ten days, why the action of the commissioner should not be approved and confirmed by the court, and made permanent. Such court may in such application, and after a full hearing, approve or disapprove of the action of the commissioner. If the court shall approve and confirm the action of the commissioner, such approval and confirmation shall operate as a permanent injunction against the further prosecution of business by such association, corporation or society, and the commissioner shall proceed immediately to liquidate the business and affairs thereof, and so continue until such liquidation has been completed. If the action of the commissioner shall be disapproved by the court, the commissioner shall cause all reasonable expenses incurred by him during his occupancy or possession, including not exceeding eight dollars per diem, for each business day, as the compensation of the custodian, to be paid from the funds of such association, corporation or society, and immediately restore the balance of the property and assets thereof to the possession of the proper officers."

We conclude, therefore, that the act known as "The Building and Loan Commissioners Act," while in certain features a bankruptcy act, contains provisions entirely foreign to the national bankruptcy act, or to the legal concept of bankruptcy. If the investigation which the state courts are authorized to conduct shall result in a finding of bankruptcy or insolvency, within the meaning of the federal act, then, under such finding or judgment, by force of the federal act itself, the jurisdiction of the state courts would be suspended, and further proceedings would necessarily be had before the federal bankruptcy courts, as contemplated by section 3, subd. 4, of that act. If, upon the other hand, it shall be disclosed upon hearing that the corporation is neither a bankrupt nor an insolvent within the meaning of the federal bankruptcy act, but is accountable under the provisions of section 9, as above set forth, then the power of the state court to proceed in conformity with the state law may not be questioned. Petitioner's position, however, is that it is not insolvent; that it has done nothing in violation of the national bankruptcy act, but that, nevertheless, it is entitled to appeal to that act and its exclusive jurisdiction to protect it against these proceedings in the state court. With this position we cannot agree.

For these reasons, the application for a writ of prohibition is denied.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

(163 Cal. 636)

PEOPLE v. BERCOVITZ. (Cr. 1,724.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—STATUTORY OFFENSES—UTTERING CHECK WITHOUT SUFFICIENT FUNDS—EFFECT OF POSTDATING.

Under Pen. Code, § 476a, which provides for the punishment of one "who willfully, with intent to defraud, makes or utters or draws or delivers to another * * * any check or draft * * * knowing at the time * * * that he has not sufficient funds in or credit with" the bank on which it is drawn to meet such check, or draft, in full on its presentation, a prosecution may be had for the utterance of a check within its terms, though such check was postdated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—EVIDENCE—UTTERING CHECK WITHOUT SUFFICIENT FUNDS—SIMILAR TRANSACTIONS TO SHOW KNOWLEDGE.

In a prosecution for uttering a check without sufficient funds in the bank on which it was drawn with which to meet it, evidence of other transactions involving the giving of other checks on the same bank by the defendant to other parties on the same and the preceding day was admissible to show the defendant's knowledge, at the time of the giving of the check in question, of the condition of his account at the bank and intent to deceive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830-832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

B. Bercovitv was convicted of a felony, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial. Affirmed.

E. F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Geo. Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ANGELOTTI, J. Defendant was convicted of a felony and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The information was drawn under the provisions of section 476a of the Penal Code, and charged the defendant with having on or about the 6th day of February, 1911, at Bakersfield, Cal., with intent to defraud one H. Cohn, made, uttered, and delivered to said Cohn a check drawn for the sum of $85 upon a Bakersfield bank, when he, the defendant, had not sufficient funds in or credit with the bank to meet the check in full on presentation, as he then and there well knew. A correct copy of the alleged check was contained in the information and was as follows: "2/6 1911 No. ——. The Bank of Bakersfield pay to H. Cohn or bearer $85.00 eighty-five and no/100 dollars. [Signed] B. Bercovitz." The evidence showed that the defendant on Saturday evening, February 4th, entered the jewelry store of the complainant and purchased a diamond ring and a pair of cuff buttons which he took away. When the price for the articles was agreed upon, he gave in payment his check for the sum of money mentioned. This check was postdated by two days, so that it was not payable until Monday, February 6th.

[1] Defendant, as one of his grounds for reversal, urges that the evidence does not sustain the verdict, because a postdated check is not such an instrument as is intended to be described by section 476a, Penal Code. The section mentioned reads as follows: "Every person who willfully, with intent to defraud, makes or draws, or utters, or delivers to another person any check or draft on a bank, banker, or depository for the payment of money, knowing at the time of such making, drawing, uttering or delivery, that he has not sufficient funds in or credit with such bank, banker or depository to meet such check or draft in full upon its presentation, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year nor more than fourteen years. The word 'credit' as used herein shall be construed to be an arrangement or understanding with the bank or depository for the payment of such check or draft."

Defendant had a checking account with the bank of Bakersfield from November, 1910. At the close of business on February 4, 1911, which was a Saturday, his balance was only $23.62. No further deposit was ever made by him. The check was refused payment for want of funds. The evidence was ample to support the conclusion that defendant knew that he had not sufficient funds in or credit with said bank to meet such check or draft upon its presentation, and that he made, drew, and delivered the same to Cohn with the intent to defraud him. It is not necessary to state the evidence in this regard, as no point is made that it is not sufficient to show what we have stated.

We are of the opinion that these facts show the offense defined by section 476a, Penal Code, and that it is altogether immaterial that the check was dated February 6, 1911, when delivered during the evening of February 4, 1911. Even if we assume in accord with appellant's claim that, by reason of the fact that the instrument was postdated, it was not a "check" within the meaning of that word as used in section 476a, Penal Code, which we do not concede, it was clearly a "draft," the giving of which under such circumstances is likewise inhibited by the section, the language being "any check or draft," and the variance between the allegation of the information, which set forth a true copy of the instrument, and the proof, is altogether immaterial. The offense defined by such section is the giving to another, with intent to defraud, "any check or draft on a bank, banker or depository for the payment of money, knowing at the time * * * that he has not sufficient funds in or credit with such bank, banker or depository to meet such check or draft in full upon its presentation." There is nothing in the language used having the effect of excepting a case from the operation of the statute merely because the "check or draft" is postdated. It is essential, of course, that there should be on the part of one giving the check or draft both present knowledge of the insufficiency of funds and absence of credit with such bank, etc., to meet the check or draft in full upon its presentation, and an intent to defraud; but no reason is apparent why both of these elements may not exist as well in the case of a postdated check or draft as in the case of one bearing the date of its delivery.

We are not here concerned with a case where the fact of want of sufficient funds and credit is made known by the drawer to the person to whom he delivers the check or draft at the time of the delivery, and the payee chooses, with such knowledge, to rely on a promise or representation of the drawer that he will make such provision that the amount thereof will be paid on presentation. It may be that, as to such a case, a conviction could not properly be had under the section in question. In the case at bar, the evidence was ample to support the conclusion that nothing was said from which it might be inferred by the person to whom the check or draft was given that the drawer did not then have sufficient funds in the bank to pay the amount named therein on its presentation. In fact, according to Mr. Cohn, defendant told him substantially that he had ample money to meet it. There is also evidence that Mr. Cohn did not in fact notice that the check was dated February 6th until some time after its delivery. The case clearly falls within the express terms of section 476a, Penal Code.

[2] Complaint is made that the trial court erred in admitting evidence of other transactions involving the giving of other checks on the same bank by defendant to other parties, on both February 3 and 4, 1911. Clearly all of this evidence was admissible on the question of defendant's knowledge at the time of the giving of the Cohn check of the condition of his account at the bank. In other respects, in so far as such evidence tended to show other offenses of a similar nature to the one here involved, it was also admissible under the rule applied in such cases as People v. Whalen, 154 Cal. 476, 98 Pac. 194, and People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 70, 72 Pac. 600, to show guilty knowledge and intent to deceive in the matter of the Cohn check.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 652

MARTIN v. PINNEY et al. (L. A. 2,859.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 29, 1912.)

PATENTS (§ 218*) — LICENSES — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

Where plaintiff, obtaining by contract with the holder of patent rights the exclusive right to manufacture and sell in enumerated states a gas furnace invented by a third person, and improvements on the furnace made during the life of the agreement, assigned to defendant such right by contract reciting plaintiff's exclusive right and granting to defendant such right in praesenti for specified royalties, the acceptance by defendant of the grant was an admission of plaintiff's right to make the grant, and where defendant claimed that nothing passed thereby, and that the furnace was in no respect covered by the patents, he must establish the fact by competent evidence to avoid liability for the royalties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Patents, Cent. Dig. §§ 330-338; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by S. W. Martin against Charles L. Pinney and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frederick S. Lyon, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Miller, Gardner & Miller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment against them for sums found to be due under a contract giving them the exclusive right to manufacture and sell certain gas furnaces in California, Oregon, and Washington. In this contract Martin was designated as the party of the first part, and defendants as parties of the second part. The agreement provided "that said first party, having the exclusive right to manufacture and sell in the states of California, Oregon, and Washington, until the 8th day of February, 1914, the Vulcan gas furnace, with all improvements thereon or variations thereof, under the terms of an agreement with the Springfield Heating & Ventilating Company, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made part thereof, marked 'Exhibit A' (the time limit of which contract has been extended to February 8th, 1914), does hereby sell, assign, and transfer to said second parties the exclusive right to manufacture, sell, and install in the states of California, Oregon, and Washington, for the term expiring February 8th, 1914, said Vulcan gas furnace and all improvements upon or variations of said furnace, which may be made during the life of this agreement, upon the following terms and conditions, to-wit:" Attached to this agreement as an exhibit was a copy of the contract between Martin and the Springfield Heating & Ventilating Company, in which the said corporation gave to him "the exclusive right to manufacture and sell in the states of California, Oregon, and Washington, for a period of five (5) years from the date hereof, the Vulcan gas furnace, an invention of R. S. Thompson of the city of Springfield, state of Ohio (said Thompson having assigned all his rights in said invention to the said party of the first part), and all improvements upon or variations of said furnace which may be made during the life of this agreement." It is not denied by defendants that, if bound by the agreement, they would be indebted to the plaintiff in the sum demanded in the complaint. Their defense is, first, actual fraud on plaintiff's part in securing their assent to the contract; and, second, "failure of plaintiff's grant and consequent failure of consideration for defendants' covenant to pay royalty." Without an extended review of the evidence we may say that the court's finding of the absence of fraud was amply sustained. When the agreement was made, the plaintiff, according to his testimony, gave full disclosure of all information which he had regarding the rights of his assignors.

The next point is the one upon which appellant apparently relies for a reversal of the judgment. At the trial defendants introduced proof that certain patents had been granted to R. S. Thompson, but sought to show by expert testimony that such patents covered mere structural peculiarities, and that the principles upon which the furnaces were constructed had long been open to use by any one wishing to employ them. Respondent contends that the validity or invalidity of the patents was not in issue, but that even assuming that subject to be a material one the court heard the offered evidence, examined the furnaces manufactured by defendants, and determined that the Thompson patents covered them. Appellants concede that the validity of a patent may not be questioned by one who has manufactured the article purporting to be protected by such patent, under a license so to do, but they insist that nothing passed from plaintiff to them, and they therefore assert that they may establish such fact in defense of an action like this. We think the court properly admitted evidence regarding the Thompson patents. The recital in the agreement that plaintiff possessed the exclusive right to manufacture the particular furnac-es in Washington, Oregon, and California was followed by a grant of such right in presenti. The acceptance by defendants of that grant was an admission on their part of plaintiff's title and right to make the grant. If, however, nothing passed by the contract, it was incumbent upon the defendants to establish that fact by competent evidence. Bowers' California Dredging Co. v. S. F. Bridge Co., 132 Cal. 345, 64 Pac. 475. It was shown at the trial that the furnaces manufactured by the defendants were essentially the same as the samples delivered to them by plaintiff Martin. In fact, this was admitted by counsel for defendants at the trial. If, then, defendants failed to establish their position that nothing passed by the contract, and that the furnaces were in no respect covered by the Thompson patents, judgment was properly given in favor of plaintiff. The court personally examined the furnaces, heard the evidence, and found that the furnaces manufactured came within the terms of the contract and under the patents. We, of course, have not seen the furnaces that the court inspected. While the expert's testimony tended to show that the important principles claimed by inventor Thompson in his applications were open to the use of any one, the court upon a full hearing and an examination of furnaces made by defendants under the contract with plaintiff decided that these furnaces came within the contract and under the patents. We cannot say that the evidence failed to uphold such conclusions by the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 617

WALKER v. PRICE. (L. A. 2,894.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings on a substantial conflict of evidence as to the terms of an oral contract cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937; Dec. Dig. § 1002.*]

2. WORK AND LABOR (§ 14*)—REPUDIATION OF CONTRACT.

A party to a contract having repudiated it and prevented the other party from fulfilling it according to its terms, the other may treat it as broken and at an end, and at his election, instead of suing for damages for its breach, may sue for the value of his services performed under it up to the time of the breach as on a quantum meruit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. §§ 31-33; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon F. Moss, Judge.

Action by George H. Walker against W. R. Price. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hatch & Lloyd and Paul W. Schenck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. F. A. Knight, of Long Beach, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action (an amendment to the complaint having been allowed by the court at the close of the evidence in the case) was brought by plaintiff under the common count of quantum meruit to recover from defendant the sum of $5,109, the alleged reasonable value of services performed by him at the request of defendant in selling 15,000 shares of the capital stock of the National Gold Dredging Company. The answer denied all the allegations of the complaint, which were only such as are usual in charging on this common count. Plaintiff had judgment for $3,750, and defendant appeals therefrom, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

There is only one point in this appeal that merits any consideration. The evidence on the part of plaintiff was that about January 28, 1908, a verbal agreement, which was to be thereafter reduced to writing and executed by defendant, was made between plaintiff and defendant, who was president and treasurer of the above corporation, whereby plaintiff should immediately undertake and effect the sale of 20,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporation at $1 per share, and in consideration thereof plaintiff should receive for every two shares of said stock sold by him one share of the stock of said company for himself and be made vice president of the corporation and general manager thereof at a salary of $300 per month; that on making this verbal arrangement plaintiff was directed by defendant to proceed forthwith and as rapidly as possible to effect a sale of the stock, as the company was in immediate need of funds, defendant assuring him that a written contract, as agreed, embodying the above terms, would be prepared by him and executed; that plaintiff at once proceeded to sell said stock, and by March 1, 1908, had made various sales thereof at the stipulated price of $1 per share, turning over to defendant the proceeds thereof; that while making such sales he frequently requested the defendant to deliver to him the written contract agreed on between them, but on different pretexts the defendant postponed doing so; that he made sale of 15,000 shares of the stock, and at the time he turned over the last amount of money for the sale thereof—about March 1, 1908—he again requested that such written contract be delivered to him; that defendant then, for the first time, denied that he had agreed to give plaintiff a written contract, or had made any such arrangement with him as plaintiff claimed, or that he had at all arranged with plaintiff to sell said stock, but asserted that any arrangement respecting the sale thereof was made between plaintiff and one Dubois, and thereupon directed plaintiff to make no further contracts for the sale of, or sell, the rest of the 20,000 shares; that plaintiff did not, and thereupon commenced this action.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On the part of defendant evidence was introduced tending to show that the arrangement respecting these 20,000 shares of stock was between plaintiff and one Dubois, who was one of the original promoters of the corporation and owner with defendant and one other person of all the issued capital stock of the corporation, and patentee of the gold-dredging machine to be operated by the company; that under their arrangement plaintiff was to purchase said 20,000 shares of corporate stock at $1 per share, or place it among his friends, where he could control it, and that if he did so he was to be elected a director of the company and its vice president and have a position as business manager at the dredging plant; that no arrangement or agreement of any kind was made to pay any commissions to plaintiff, nor any agreement made as to his salary as business manager; that this was the sole arrangement under which the delivery of the stock to defendant was made and payments received; and there was no agreement by any one connected with the transaction that plaintiff should have a written contract.

[1] While the matter of the contract is in dispute, there can be no question, under the evidence, but that plaintiff made sale of the 15,000 shares of stock and turned the money over to defendant, and that a reasonable compensation or commission for making such a sale, in the absence of any specific contract on the subject, was the amount as found by the court. While the defendant attacks the findings (which follow the allegations of the complaint, except as to the amount claimed as compensation for making the sale) on the ground that they are not sustained by the evidence, it is unnecessary to discuss this point. It is mainly directed to the terms of the special contract asserted by the parties; but, as the evidence was in substantial conflict on that subject, we cannot disturb the conclusion of the court, which was necessarily in favor of the claim of plaintiff, and sustaining his right to recover upon a quantum meruit for its breach.

[2] The main claim of appellant is, however, that, conceding that the claim of the plaintiff as to what the contract between the parties was is true, it does not support his right to recover in this character of action; but that under the contract, as he claims it was made, his sole remedy for its breach by defendant was an action for damages, and not on quantum meruit. But this claim is without merit under the evidence and findings of the court. The agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was an entire contract. Under it plaintiff was to sell 20,000 shares of the capital stock, in consideration of which defendant agreed that certain benefits and advantages should be received by plaintiff, and as an essential part of the arrangement defendant was to execute a written agreement with plaintiff embodying such terms. Under the assurance that such written agreement would be executed by defendant and carried out on his part, plaintiff entered upon the fulfillment of his part of the contract, and when it had been partially performed by him through the sale of 15,000 of the 20,000 shares defendant refused to execute the contract, denied its terms, and repudiated it and refused to permit plaintiff further to proceed with carrying it out by a sale of the remainder of the stock.

It is well settled that where one party to a contract repudiates it, or prevents the other party from fully performing it according to its terms, the latter may treat the contract as broken and at an end, and at his election sue either for damages consequent on its breach, or for the value of his services performed under it up to the time of the breach as upon a quantum meruit. Plaintiff elected to adopt this latter course, and, under the evidence, was fully warranted in doing so.

Other points are made by appellant, but in our opinion they are without any merit and need no mention or discussion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(163 Cal. 632)

LILLY-BRACKETT CO. v. SONNEMANN.
(L. A. 2,903.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1912.)

JUDGMENT (§ 884*)—ACTION ON FOREIGN JUDGMENT—MERGER.

A judgment rendered by a court of one state is not merged in the judgment obtained in another state in an action thereon; but an action on the original judgment is maintainable, unless it has been satisfied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1661-1663; Dec. Dig. § 884.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by the Lilly-Brackett Company against A. H. Sonnemann. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 157 Cal. 192, 106 Pac. 715.

J. W. McKinley, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Herbert Cutler Brown and George H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff brought suit upon a judgment against defendant, obtained in the state of Massachusetts. Defendant answered, alleging that a judgment, based upon the Massachusetts judgment, had been obtained by plaintiff against him, and had become final in the state of Washington. The court gave judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings, and from it this appeal is taken.

The only question presented is whether or not the judgment rendered in Massachusetts was merged in the judgment, based upon it, which was given in favor of plaintiff in Washington. This is a new question in California, so far as we are advised, and the authorities in other jurisdictions are in conflict. Appellant, in commending to our attention the authorities favoring the theory of merger, says that if the original judgment or "debt of record" is to remain of full vitality in the state in which it was originally obtained, and judgments in other states, based upon it, are also to be enforceable, a debtor may be harassed in various states in which he may own property and prevented from selling it to advantage by the existence of the creditor's judgments. Respondent's answer is that this hardship may be avoided by the payment of the debt. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 19.

In 23 Cyc. at page 1474, the rule is thus stated: "According to the weight of authority, where an existing judgment is sued on as a cause of action, and a new judgment recovered on it, there is no merger of the first judgment; nor is it extinguished without satisfaction of the second." Lawson, in his work on Rights, Remedies, and Practice (volume 5, p. 2580), says: "No merger takes place where the two securities are of equal degree." The leading case holding the contrary doctrine has been followed in some jurisdictions by the courts and adopted as convincing authority by some text-writers. In 92 Am. St. Rep. at page 778 is a note reviewing the decisions, and announcing the better rule to be that a judgment is extinguished when, by its use as a cause of action, it grows into another judgment. This view is also approved by Mr. Freeman, in his work on Judgments (as indicated in the note in 92 Am. St. Rep. cited above), and to the same effect is the text in 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 336. After stating this doctrine and the authorities for it, the Supreme Court of Colorado, in Wells v. Schuster-Hax Nat. Bank, 23 Colo. 537, 48 Pac. 810, says: "The contrary doctrine is announced in other authorities and proceeds upon the theory originally given for the rule that merger takes place only where a security, or indebtedness, of an inferior passes into one of a superior degree. Weeks v. Pearson, 5 N. H. 324; Mumford v. Stocker, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 178; Bates v. Lyons, 7 Paige's Chan. 85; 2 Black on Judgments, § 864; Hogg v. Charlton, 25 Pa. 200; McLean v. McLean, 90 N. C. 530; Andrews v. Smith, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 54. It is said, however, that the latter authorities predicate this doctrine of merger upon the ground that the allowance of a new suit is superfluous and a vexatious encouragement to litigation injurious to the defendant, and of no benefit to the plaintiff. Without further pursuing the inquiry, we content ourselves by saying that it seems more in consonance with principle to base the doctrine upon the reason originally given for its establishment, and that, so long as the indebtedness is unsatisfied, successive suits in different states may be prosecuted." In Armour Bros. Banking Co. v. Addington, 1 Ind. T. 304, 37 S. W. 102, this language is used with reference to the same problem as that before us here: "But a second judgment obtained upon the first is of no higher security than the first. Both should stand until the debt which is evidenced by them is fully paid off and satisfied. The first judgment is neither satisfied, merged, nor extinguished by a second judgment on the same cause of action, or by an affirmation thereof by a superior court. 'Satisfaction' is a technical term, and in its application to a judgment it means the payment of the money due on the judgment, which must be entered of record; and nothing but this is a legal satisfaction of the judgment." In Weeks v. Pearson, 5 N. H. 325, the court said: "The reason why a former recovery for the same cause is a bar to a second action is that the cause of action has passed in rem judicatam, and is determined by the judgment. But this reason does not exist where there has been a recovery in another state in debt upon a judgment rendered here. For one judgment being of as high a nature as another, a judgment in another state cannot extinguish or determine a judgment rendered here." In Springs v. Pharr, 131 N. C. 193, 42 S. E. 590 (92 Am. St. Rep. 775), the rule was thus phrased: "We must concur in this conclusion that a judgment upon a judgment, being of the same dignity, does not fall within the general rule that a cause of action is merged in the judgment." See, also, Griswold v. Hill, 11 Fed. Cas. 63, No. 5,836; Mumford v. Stocker, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 178. Mr. Bigelow, in his note to section 599a of Story on Conflict of Laws, says: "It may be inconvenient that two judgments should subsist in the same state against the same person on the same demand; but no such inconvenience can exist in the case of judgments rendered in different states; and there is no sufficient reason for the application of the purely technical doctrine of merger, subversive of substantial justice, as it would be, in such cases. Indeed, in view of the fact that one satisfaction would satisfy both judgments, there is little to be said in favor of the doctrine of merger, reasonable as that doctrine may be in ordinary cases, by a second judgment obtained upon the first, even in the same state."

We can add nothing to the reasoning of these cited authorities, except to say that, in our opinion, it is sound, in accordance with justice, and should be adopted in California as establishing a rule that comports with reason.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(163 Cal. 648)

UNKEL v. ROBINSON et al. (L. A. 2,899.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 28, 1912.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 37*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—ACTIONS TO ENFORCE.

An action to establish a constructive trust in real estate, on the ground of defendant fraudulently procuring from plaintiff the money used in the acquisition of the real estate, and for a sale thereof to pay the amount fraudulently procured, is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, requiring an action for relief on the ground of fraud to be brought within three years after the discovery of fraud, and not within section 343, providing that an action for relief not otherwise provided for must be commenced within four years after the accrual of the cause of action; and where the complaint is not filed until more than three years after the discovery of the fraud, the action is barred by limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 182-186; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by William Unkel against Pauline Robinson and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Dennison, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Isidore B. Dockweiler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. The complaint in this action alleged that defendant had, between the months of May and November, 1905, fraudulently procured from plaintiff various sums of money, aggregating $4,020, which she had used in purchasing a house and lot in the city of Los Angeles, and that such fraud was not discovered by plaintiff until about November 1, 1905. The prayer was that it be declared that defendant held said real property as a trust for plaintiff for the amount of said $4,020, that said property be sold, and that the said amount so fraudulently procured from plaintiff be paid to him from the proceeds of such sale. A demurrer to the complaint, on the ground, among others, that it appeared on the face thereof that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, was sustained; and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The only point involved here is the bar of the statute of limitations. Appellant's cause of action is based on section 2224 of the Civil Code, which declares that "one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust or other wrongful act is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

The periods prescribed for the commencement of actions other than those for the recovery of real property (section 335, Code Civ. Proc.) are as follows: "Sec. 338. Within three years: * * * 4. An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." The superior court held that the cause of action alleged in the complaint was barred by said subdivision 4 of this section.

The claim of appellant is that the purpose of this action is to establish a constructive trust, and is controlled by section 343 of the said Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "an action for relief not heretofore provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued." True, the appellant is seeking to establish a constructive trust; but such a trust may arise under various circumstances, which may embrace no element of fraud in fact, or even technical fraud within the law. Here the constructive trust which appellant endeavors to have established is based on fraud as the substantive cause of action; and how section 343 can apply, and why subdivision 4 of section 338 does not, appellant has not undertaken to point out in his brief. He contents himself by declaring that it is an action to establish a constructive trust, that section 343 applies, and cites a number of cases as sustaining his declaration—cases such as Oakland v. Carpentier, 13 Cal. 540, Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 146, 73 Pac. 820, and Daniels v. Dean, 2 Cal. App. 421, 84 Pac. 332. But all of these actions were for the recovery of real property; the relief sought being grounded on fraud. Section 343 had no consideration in any of these cases; the question therein being whether subdivision 4 of section 338, prescribing the three-year limitation in actions based on fraud, or section 318 of the same Code, providing a five-year period for the recovery of real property, applied. It was held in these cases (the matter being more particularly discussed in the cited case of Murphy v. Crowley) that sections 318 and 338 were to be construed together, and that, as by section 335 the provisions of section 338 only applied to actions other than for the recovery of real property, section 318 must govern where, though the principal ground for relief is on account of fraud, still in the action the party seeks the recovery of real property on the ground of such fraud. In such case the bar of section 338 does not apply, but the action is controlled by the five-year statute of limitation provided by section 318. As said in Murphy v.

Crowley, supra, 140 Cal. 146, 73 Pac. 820, after fully discussing this subject: "It seems to be established, therefore, by these cases, that, although the main ground of action is fraud or mistake, whereby the defendant has obtained the legal title to the land in controversy, and the chief contention between the parties is with respect to the fraud or mistake alleged, yet, if the plaintiff alleges facts which show, as matter of law, that he is entitled to possession of the property, and a part of the relief asked for is that he be let into possession, or that his title to the land be quieted, the action is in reality for the recovery of real property, and is not barred, except by the five-year limitation contained in section 318."

This is not an action brought by plaintiff to recover real property, and plaintiff does not insist that section 318 has any application in the case at bar, and it is not observable how the cases he cites can have any relation to this case. Plaintiff was never the owner of the property, or in possession of it. What he seeks is simply to establish a constructive trust in his favor on the ground of fraud, and to have the property sold, and from the proceeds to have refunded him the moneys fraudulently obtained from him and invested in the property. Not a case is cited by him which holds that section 343 applies in a case like the one here. That section is a residuary clause, which applies only when no other section is applicable. Section 338 is, however, clearly applicable, as fraud is the gravamen and very essence of the cause of action set out in this complaint, and the relief sought is on the ground of fraud under the cited section of the Code which provides for relief on that ground. This action is governed as to the statute of limitations by the cases of Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 30, 87 Am. Dec. 146, and Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. 570, which were actions brought to establish trusts in favor of plaintiffs in certain real property on the ground of fraud, and it was held that subdivision 4 of section 338 was applicable to such actions. In People v. Blankenship, 52 Cal. 619, Moore v. Moore, 56 Cal. 89, and Castro v. Gell, 110 Cal. 292, 42 Pac. 804, 52 Am. St. Rep. 84, actions brought to set aside conveyances on the ground of fraud or undue influence, it was also held that subdivision 4 of section 338, was applicable.

As the complaint in this action was not filed until more than three years after plaintiff alleges in his complaint that he had discovered the alleged fraud, the action was therefore barred by subdivision 4 of section 338, and the order of the superior court, sustaining the demurrer on that ground, was correct.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(163 Cal. 644)

SMILEY v. READ et al. (L. A. 2,876.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 28, 1912.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 101*)—TENDER—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, which provides that objection to a tender may be waived by a failure to specify the objection at the time of such tender, one who did not object at the time a conveyance was tendered him that the amount of land was not the same as that in the contract could not at any time after his acceptance of the tender make such an objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 290, 295, 311-317; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 114*)—PLEADING—ALLEGATION OF ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

In a complaint for specific performance of a land contract, an allegation that such contract "was fair, equitable and reasonable" is insufficient as an averment of adequacy of consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-372; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by David Smiley against George J. Read and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

R. B. Bidwell, of Glendora, for appellants.
C. H. Converse, of Glendora, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement whereby the former promised to purchase and the latter covenanted to sell certain real property described in the contract as "the 10.90 acres in the southwest corner of Grand and Minnehaha aves., known as the Geo. Read Tract." Thereafter defendants caused their land to be platted and a portion thereof to be dedicated for street purposes. A part of said property was designated as "Lot 1 of tract 478," and a deed indicating it by that form of description was tendered to plaintiff. He accepted the deed, paid the balance of the purchase price together with a note and mortgage in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale, and then made demand for a conveyance of a difference of acreage between that mentioned in the agreement and the area of "lot 1 of tract 478." This being refused, he sued for specific performance of the contract, or, if that were no longer possible, for damages arising from the breach. The court determined that defendants had put specific performance out of their power, and gave judgment for damages in the sum of $753.52 with costs. Defendants prosecute this appeal from the said judgment. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone.

[1] Appellants rely for a reversal of the judgment principally upon an alleged estoppel. Respondent denies the estoppel and insists that in any event, as no estoppel was pleaded, none may be recognized. There was, however, a pleading of facts which, if established, would estop plaintiff from denying full satisfaction of his claim arising under the contract, for defendant George J. Read in his answer "denies that prior to the payments of the moneys or the execution and delivery of the securities hereinbefore alleged plaintiff did not know the number of acres conveyed by defendant's deed, but allege the facts to be that prior to the payment of said $3,000 and the execution and delivery of said securities the plaintiff examined the deed tendered by defendant, and also the certificate of title, and that, after said examination, plaintiff paid to said defendant the said sum of $3,000, and delivered the aforesaid securities and accepted said deed and certificate without any objection to the sufficiency thereof whatsoever." The court found: "That at the time said transaction was closed the parties met at the First National Bank of Glendora and there were present the plaintiff, and Mr. Converse, his attorney, the defendants not being present, but being represented by Mr. Weaver. That the certificate of title which the defendants tendered to the plaintiff showed said lot 1 to contain 9.676 acres of land, and the deed which defendants tendered described said land to be conveyed as lot 1 in tract 478. That plaintiff accepted said deed and certificate of title, paid the balance of the money he was to pay, and delivered the note and mortgage which he was to deliver, and went out. That, when Mr. Weaver went out, Mr. Converse served upon him a paper he had prepared before the deed was delivered and accepted, and stated that the land was short, and demanded that they give them full measure or pay them the money. That Mr. Weaver stated that he knew nothing about that, and that they should notify Mr. Read about that; and afterwards they did notify Mr. Read. That during all the negotiations defendants were acting as agents for each other." This finding establishes the estoppel for which defendant contends. Section 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the person to whom a tender is made must, at the time, specify any objection he may have to the money, instrument, or property, or he must be deemed to have waived it; and, if the objection be to the amount of money, the terms of the instrument, or the amount or kind of property, he must specify the amount, terms, or kind which he requires, or be precluded from objecting afterwards." It makes no difference how soon after the consummation of the sale plaintiff made his objection. His duty was to assert his unwillingness to accept the land offered at the time of the tender. Failing to do this, he was estopped from demanding the fraction of an acre representing the difference between the amount of land mentioned in the contract and that specified in the certificate of title. Montgomery v. De Picot, 153 Cal. 515, 96 Pac. 305, 126 Am. St. Rep. 84; Gregg v. Von Phul, 68 U. S. 274, 17 L. Ed. 536. The case last cited was one in which the vendee under a contract of sale refused to accept a deed when tendered in accordance with the terms of the contract. The court said: "He cannot now take exceptions to a deed which he failed to perceive when it was tendered to him, or if he knew then, failed to disclose." There is nothing in Cavanaugh v. Casselman, 88 Cal. 545, 26 Pac. 515, which is at all in conflict with the cases cited herein or with our determination of this appeal. Respondent quotes with apparent confidence, as determinative of this appeal in his favor, one paragraph of that decision, which is as follows: "The contention of the plaintiff that the contract was merged in the deed is also untenable. The plaintiff, by the execution of the contract of May 16th, had a valid obligation against the defendant for the conveyance of a tract of land. That obligation could not be satisfied by the conveyance of a part of the tract, any more than would the payment of a money obligation be satisfied by the payment of a part thereof. Whether the conveyance of a part was made with or without controversy between the parties is immaterial. Unless it was accepted in satisfaction of the agreement, the unexecuted part of the original agreement remained in full force. An agreement for the conveyance of 100 acres of land, except by an agreement between the parties, cannot be satisfied by a conveyance of 50 acres. Civ. Code, §§ 1477, 1524."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

But the above language was used with reference to an entirely different state of facts from that which exists in the case before us. In the cited case a deed and bill of sale had been offered in satisfaction of the agreement between the parties to the action, and had been refused. Plaintiff then prepared and offered to defendant for execution a deed and bill of sale accurately conforming to the contract, but defendant declined to execute these instruments. Later, because of his anxiety to comply with a contract of lease made with third parties, plaintiff accepted the deed and bill of sale offered by defendant, and (we quote from the findings as set out in the decision) "the defendant then delivered the said deed and bill of sale to the plaintiff with full understanding that they were not accepted as a full performance of said contract, but that plaintiff reserved the right to sue defendant for said breach." It will thus be seen that the paragraph upon which respondent depends is not at all applicable to the facts of the case at bar.

[2] Appellants also contend that their demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained because there were no allegations in that pleading from which the court could determine that the consideration was adequate. The only averment in this regard was "that said contract was fair, equitable, and reasonable." This does not amount to an allegation of adequacy of consideration. Herzog v. A. T. & S. F. R. R., 153 Cal. 500, 95 Pac. 898; Sunrise Land Co. v. Root, 160 Cal. 97, 116 Pac. 72.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

163 Cal. 639

SEMI-TROPIC SPIRITUALISTS' ASS'N v. JOHNSON. (L. A. 2,913.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 305*) — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT FOR AN ACCOUNTING—GENERAL DEMURRER—ALLEGATIONS OF CONSIDERATION—"ADVANCE."

A complaint in an action for an accounting, which alleged the purchase of lands for the complainant's benefit and the taking of title thereto by the defendant under an agreement that he should "advance" sums necessary to purchase, sufficiently charged, as against a general demurrer, that there was a consideration moving from the plaintiff to the defendant which would support the action, as the word "advance" implies the return of money furnished for a specific purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 421-426; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 214, 215; vol. 8, pp. 7566, 7567.]

2. INTEREST (§ 67*)—CONTRACT FOR—IMPLICATION FROM LOAN.

Under Civ. Code, § 1914, which provides that a loan of money is presumed to be made upon interest, unless otherwise stipulated in writing, an advancement to purchase property will be presumed to be made upon interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. §§ 155, 156; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 334*)—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—GENERAL DEMURRER — QUANTUM MERUIT.

Where the complaint alleged certain services, which were to be performed for the plaintiff by the defendant, an agreement to pay a quantum meruit will be implied, and it is sufficient to show consideration as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1660-1663; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 205*)—DEFECTIVE STATEMENT OF ESSENTIAL FACTS—EFFECT OF GENERAL AND SPECIAL DEMURRERS.

Where essential facts in a pleading are stated defectively, or without clearness, or appear only by implication, the defects may be reached by special demurrer alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 491-510; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 305*)—COMPLAINT IN ACCOUNTING—"PURCHASE."

In an action for an accounting, in which the issue was as to whether the defendant furnished the money to "purchase" property for the plaintiff, or purchased it for his own account, the complaint was not insufficient for alleging that the defendant purchased the property, thereby implying the payment of money, and negating the possibility of a debt, a fiduciary relation, or duty to render an accounting, as such expression also means the acquisition of property by a party's own act, as distinguished from acquisition by act of law (citing 7 Words and Phrases, 5853).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 421-426; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*) — PRESUMPTIONS—REFEREE'S FINDINGS.

The court, on review of an action for an accounting, must assume that a referee's general finding as to a sum due was supported by the evidence, without the necessity of more minute particularization, in the absence of a specification of instances in which it was not based on the referee's transcript.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2911-2915, 2916, 3673, 3674, 3676, 3678; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action for an accounting by the Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Association against Peter Johnson. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. P. Cook, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Julius Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered against him and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The cause was tried before a referee, and his findings were adopted by the court. By stipulation the transcript of the testimony taken before the court commissioner was used as a statement of the case on defendant's motion for a new trial. As the procedure followed was that provided by section 953a et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, no printed transcript has been filed, but appellant preserves certain parts of the testimony in his brief.

The principal controversy is waged over the complaint and the court's action in overruling the demurrer thereto. The complaint alleged that plaintiff purchased a certain tract of land in Los Angeles county for the purpose of establishing a tabernacle for the said corporation and its members, that by mutual arrangement between plaintiff's board of directors and defendant it was agreed that the deed to said property should be taken for plaintiff in the name of defendant, and "that defendant should advance for plaintiff such sums as might be necessary for the purchase of said lands and for certain necessary improvements thereon." The complaint further alleges that it was agreed by the parties to this action that the portion of the property not needed for the tabernacle should be divided into lots and sold by defendant "for and in behalf of said plaintiff," that defendant should receive the revenue arising from the sale of lots, and should fully account to plaintiff for all moneys received and paid out by him. Then follow averments of the purchase of the property for plaintiff in defendant's name, the sale of lots, and the receipt of more money from said transactions than defendant had advanced, including interest on the advances. It is further alleged "that defendant has conveyed to plaintiff all of said premises remaining unsold." A demand is made for an accounting and payment to plaintiff of the amount found due. Another paragraph of the complaint states that defendant has caused the filing of a mechanic's lien on said premises, and the tabernacle erected thereon, for the sum of $500 claimed to be due from plaintiff to defendant, but that the claim is without merit. There is a prayer that defendant be required to satisfy said lien of record.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1, 2] Appellant insists that the complaint utterly fails to aver any contract between the parties, or any consideration moving from plaintiff to defendant because of the acts to be performed by the latter. "There is no allegation," says defendant, "that plaintiff was to repay the defendant for the money he advanced, provided no lots were sold, or that, if defendant received from the sale of lots more than he had expended, he was to account and pay over the excess to the plaintiff." While defendant's demurrer was both general and special, the court's attention was not specially directed to the alleged failure to state a consideration. We must, therefore, consider this point under the general demurrer. Although we cannot commend plaintiff's pleading as a model, we think it is sufficient in form and substance to sustain the court's action in overruling the demurrer thereto. There is a distinct recognition in the complaint of defendant's right to a consideration, for it is alleged that the money received for sales of lots is greatly in excess of all moneys advanced, "including interest thereon." The complaint sets forth an agreement that defendant was to "advance" such sums as should be necessary to purchase the property. The word "advance" implies, when used in this connection, "to furnish money for a specific purpose, understood between the parties, the money or some equivalent to be returned." Black's Law Dict. The allegation of an advance, upon a mutual agreement of one to take and pay for property for another in his own name, implies an agreement upon the part of the beneficiary of such payment to reimburse the one who made the advancement. Such a loan, unless expressly stipulated in writing, is presumed to be made upon interest. Section 1914, Civ. Code.

[3, 4] The complaint alleges certain services which were to be performed for plaintiff by defendant Johnson. This implies an agreement to pay a quantum meruit. Toohey v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 643, 25 Pac. 130. Where the essential facts are stated defectively, or without clearness, or appear by necessary implication, the defects may only be reached by special demurrer. Amestoy v. Electric Rapid Transit Co., 95 Cal. 314, 30

Pac. 550; Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 742, 82 Pac. 436. Judged, then, by this rule, the complaint was good as against a general demurrer. It alleged a loan or advancement, implying a promise of repayment with interest, acknowledged plaintiff's obligation to pay interest, averred certain services by Johnson in plaintiff's behalf, implying a duty by the corporation to pay him a reasonable compensation, and pleaded the partial execution of the contract on the part of Johnson by his act of deeding the unsold lots to the plaintiff.

[5] Appellant calls our attention to the use of the word "purchased" in the complaint, wherein it is alleged that the defendant "purchased" the property in question. This, he says, implies the payment of money and negatives the possibility of a debt, a fiduciary relation, or a legal duty resting on defendant to render an accounting. While the word "purchase" does mean "to buy," it also means "the acquisition of property by a party's own act as distinguished from acquisition by act of law." 7 Words and Phrases, 5853. The complaint sets forth defendant's agency in a manner sufficient to call for an accounting, if the allegations are found to be true.

In his amended cross-complaint defendant pleaded an account stated, about August 26, 1907, "whereby plaintiff acknowledged itself indebted to defendant in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00) for a building purchased by defendant for plaintiff's use and benefit." Appellant insists that there was no finding upon this issue. He is in error. There was a finding: "That said defendant sold to plaintiff a tabernacle, which was placed upon said premises, and that the parties hereto agreed that said defendant was to receive therefor the sum of $480, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum." And, if this were not sufficient, there is an additional finding: "That neither on or about the 2d day of July, 1906, nor at any other time, did plaintiff and defendant settle and close the mutual demands and credits existing between said parties hereto." True, the last-quoted finding has special reference to an averment contained in defendant's answer; but its language is sufficiently comprehensive to cover all matters of alleged accounts stated.

[6] Appellant quotes certain selected portions of the testimony given before the court commissioner, showing that there was a sharp conflict of evidence regarding the amount of money received by appellant upon certain contracts of sale. He insists that these and similar instances of conflict were entitled to specific findings, because, without such segregation, it is impossible to tell how the referee arrived at the general conclusion: "That defendant has received from plaintiff and from various purchasers of said lots, to be credited to plaintiff, the sum of $4,252.50." Of course, it is quite impossible, without a painstaking examination of the referee's transcript (which we are not required by law to make, and which appellant's counsel has not made for us, and presented, even in an abbreviated form), to determine whether appellant's supposed difficulty is real or imaginary. It may be, for all that appears to the contrary in the record before us, that the referee's figures may be obtained by accepting in every instance the evidence offered on behalf of plaintiff and rejecting defendant's testimony, or that the opposite method may result in the figures adopted by the commissioner and the court. The superior court, with the whole record before the judge thereof, evidently experienced no difficulty in this regard, and, in the absence of any clear showing made here, we must assume that the general finding was clearly supported by the evidence, without the necessity of more minute particularization.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(163 Cal. 611)

LUCY v. DAVIS. (L. A. 2,883.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 79*)—CONSTRUCTION OF LAND CONTRACT—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

A land contract provided that a balance of the purchase price should be paid in monthly installments between the 1st and 15th of each month at a certain bank, "according to agreement with" a certain land and trust company. Held, the provision as to the agreement with the land and trust company was merely parenthetical, and explanatory of the previous agreement as to the time of making payment, so that specific compliance therewith was not necessary to be shown as a condition precedent to the purchaser's right to a deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 7, 8, 127-131; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 221*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Courts will not ordinarily construe stipulations in a contract as conditions precedent, especially where such construction will work a forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1015-1032; Dec. Dig. § 221.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 121*)—PERFORMANCE BY PURCHASER—EVIDENCE.

In an action for specific performance of a land contract, evidence held to show the payment of installments of the purchase price in substantial accord with the provisions of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 387-395; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

4. DEPOSITIONS (§ 110*)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—OBJECTION—INDEFINITENESS.

An objection to a deposition that practically all the evidence therein appeared on cross-examination to be "based on hearsay" was properly overruled for its indefiniteness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 323-328½; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 93*)—STRIKING OUT TESTIMONY—PRECISION OF OBJECTION.

A motion to strike out testimony must be directed with precision to the testimony which the moving party desires the court to eliminate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 246; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 105*)—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY—FAILURE TO OBJECT OR CONTRADICT.

A trial court properly accepted a statement as to a balance due on a land contract, though shown by evidence of a hearsay character, where such evidence was not objected to, and not contradicted by evidence or mathematical calculation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 260-266; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 187*)—RIGHTS OF VENDOR'S TRANSFeree—ESTOPPEL TO COMPLAIN OF PURCHASER'S DELAY IN TENDER.

The transferee of the rights of the vendor in a land contract cannot complain of the purchaser's delay in tendering payments due thereafter, where he accepted the transfer with full knowledge of the purchaser's rights and without notifying him of the transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 374, 375; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 187*)—TENDER BY PURCHASER—WAIVER OF IRREGULARITIES BY OBJECTION.

Where the transferee of the rights of a vendor under a land contract refused a tender made by the purchaser, for the reason that the purchaser owed him nothing, there was a waiver of all objection to the mode or time of the offer of performance, as well as to the sufficiency of the sum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 374, 375; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

9. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 101*)—PROOF OF PAYMENT OF TAXES—EFFECT OF WAIVER OF SUFFICIENCY OF TENDER.

Proof of the payment of taxes was not necessary to have specific performance of a land contract, which provided that the vendee should pay such taxes, where the vendor did not object to the sufficiency of a tender made, as, if the vendor had paid such taxes, he thereby waived his right to recover, and, if he had not, the vendee would take subject to the state's lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 290, 295, 311-317; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by George W. Lucy against R. W. Davis. From a judgment for plaintiff on defendant's motion for nonsuit, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. C. Farr, of Imperial, for appellant. Eshleman & Swing, of El Centro, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an action for specific performance of a contract to convey certain real property. After plaintiff had introduced certain evidence and had rested his case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit. This motion being denied, defendant introduced no evidence. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appeals from said judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

By a certain agreement in writing one William H. Allen (described as the party of the first part) agreed to sell to one Paul Rittner (called the party of the second part) certain real property in Imperial county for $1,200. According to the terms of the agreement, part of the purchase price was to be paid to the vendor in installments, the amounts and dates of which are set forth in the contract. These payments, according to the agreement, were to bear interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from the date of the instrument. The contract also contains this language: "The balance of said $1,200 to be paid in monthly payments between the 1st and 15th of each month at the rate of $11.50 per month, and to be paid at the First National Bank of Imperial according to agreement with Renters' Loan & Trust Company of San Francisco, Cal., and the said party of the second part agrees to pay all state and county taxes or assessments of whatsoever nature which are or may become due on the premises above described." This agreement was dated May 23, 1905. It was admitted by the pleadings that $1,200 was a just, fair, and adequate consideration for the land described in the contract of sale. The complaint alleged and the court found that Rittner, by consent of Allen, assigned all his right, title, and interest in the agreement to plaintiff, George W. Lucy, and that he delivered to said Lucy peaceable possession of the property in question on January 15, 1907, and that plaintiff had since been in possession thereof. It is also alleged and found that, in accordance with the agreement of sale, plaintiff made payments to Allen of the amounts and at the times provided in the contract, but before the installment of March 1, 1908, was due plaintiff tendered to Allen the sum of $82 to cover said payment, with interest, but that Allen, without just cause, refused to accept the money; that a similar tender was made on August 31, 1908, to cover the installment and interest due the following day, but this tender was also refused by Allen; and that from January, 1907, to October, 1908, plaintiff, in accordance with the agreement, paid the Renters' Loan & Trust Company the regular monthly payments as provided in the contract of sale, but in the latter month the said company refused to accept further payments, although tender was regularly made. It was further alleged and found that in February, 1908, without plaintiff's knowledge, Allen sold and transferred to Paul H. Rittner all of his interest in the property, and that the latter, in turn, sold his interest to defendant, R. W. Davis, and that Rittner and Davis had full knowledge of plaintiff's existing claims to the land in question. It was also found by the court that plaintiff still owed to Allen or his successor in interest $552.30, which had been deposited to Davis' credit on May 7, 1908, by the plaintiff, who had kept his tender good at all times, and the judgment was that defendant, on receipt of that sum of money, should convey all of his title to plaintiff.

[1] Appellant says that the agreement contains a condition precedent, which has not been performed, namely, the carrying out of the contract between the Renters' Loan & Trust Company of San Francisco and Allen. His theory is that the proof should have shown just what this contract was, and that the payments by plaintiff in Allen's behalf were made in accordance with it. Appellant is entirely in error in this. It was not necessary that, in order to make plain the contract here considered, the terms of the agreement between Allen and the Renters' Loan & Trust Company should be ascertained and set forth, and compliance therewith made a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to a deed from Allen. The requirement that plaintiff should pay $11.50 a month to the corporation named was simply a covenant. The words "according to agreement with Renters' Loan & Trust Company" were merely parenthetical, and explanatory of the previous requirement that the installment should be paid between the 1st and 15th of each month. If the contract had provided that payment should be made to "John Smith, because the party of the first part owes him money," no one would contend that the reason for the indebtedness of the party of the first part to Smith would be material. This agreement does nothing more than order payment on account of a debt, except that it explains the time when amounts are due under some contract for the payment thereof.

[2] Courts are disinclined to construe stipulations of a contract as conditions precedent, especially when such course would work a forfeiture, and, even if we were in doubt, we would hesitate to reach the inequitable conclusion desired by defendant. Antonelle v. Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 315, 73 Pac. 966; Diepenbrock v. Luiz, 159 Cal. 718, 115 Pac. 743. But we are convinced that the part of the agreement under discussion does not express a condition precedent.

[3] The findings of the court to the effect that payments were made in substantial accord with the provisions of the contract, until plaintiff was prevented from further compliance therewith by the conduct of defendant, are sustained by the evidence. The plaintiff testified that he made certain payments to Allen in accordance with the terms of the agreement. It is true that Allen objected in one instance that there had been a miscalculation of the amount of interest due; but he accepted the check tendered, and accepted the amounts subsequently sent to him, until after the transfer of his interest in the property to Rittner. Plaintiff testified that he made the payments to the Renters' Loan & Trust Company for 22 months, counting what his mother paid. The book containing receipts for these amounts was before him when he made this statement, and there seems to have been no objection to his testimony. His mother corroborated him with reference to the payments made by her.

[4, 5] After Mrs. Lucy's deposition was read, a motion to strike it out was made. This was based upon the ground that practically all of her testimony appeared on cross-examination to be "based upon hearsay." This objection was too indefinite. She testified positively that some payments were made by her to the corporation mentioned in the book then in court, and as the court stated in ruling that it was the book other parts of which had been introduced in evidence, the book and her payments also were thus identified as connected with the Renters' Loan & Trust Company. The objection to the admission of the book in evidence, as well as the vague and general motion to strike out her testimony, were properly overruled. A motion, to be available, must be directed with precision to the testimony which the moving party desires the court to eliminate. Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 644, 87 Pac. 93. Much of her testimony was based upon communications to her by her son and his attorneys; but in almost every instance defendant's counsel failed either to object to such testimony or to note an exception to an adverse ruling. Taken altogether, the evidence supports the findings.

[6] Appellant characterizes the testimony of respondent as almost entirely hearsay. Much of it doubtless was, but nearly all of his conclusions were allowed to go into the record without exception. For example, he said that $552.30 was the balance due to and demanded by Davis according to the information given him by his attorneys, although he had not personally conferred with defendant upon that matter. While this was, of course, hearsay, it went in without objection, and as it was not contradicted, either by evidence or by mathematical calculation, the trial court was justified in accepting it.

[7, 8] As Davis, having full knowledge of Lucy's rights, failed to notify the latter of the transfer to him of Allen's interest in the property, he is not in a position to complain of respondent's delay in tendering the payments due after said equitable assignment of the contract. As soon as Lucy heard of the transfer, he took prompt steps to discover the amount due and made tender thereof to Davis. That the sum of $552.30 was offered by plaintiff and by defendant refused is admitted by the answer. Appellant having stated no reason for refusing the tender, except that respondent owed him nothing, he waived all objections to the mode or time of the offer of performance which he might have made, as well as to the sufficiency of the sum tendered. Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 320, 54 Pac. 1115; Latimer v. Capay Valley Land Co., 137 Cal. 288, 70 Pac. 82.

[9] No evidence with reference to payment of taxes was offered, although under the contract the vendee was to pay them. We do not see that appellant was injured by this omission. If he paid the taxes, he waived his right to recovery by failing to object to the amount tendered by respondent. If he did not pay them, he is not injured; for, in that event, respondent takes the property subject to the state's lien for taxes. No other alleged errors require discussion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(163 Cal. 609)

MOORE et al. v. CONLEY, Judge of Superior Court. (S. F. 6,313.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 29, 1912.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 172*)—PETITION FOR WRIT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

On application for a writ of mandate, the Supreme Court can merely assume that the facts stated in the petition are true, in the absence of opportunity to respondent to contest them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 381-385; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 37*)—LICENSE SYSTEM—ELECTION TO ADOPT—CONTESTS—CONTINUANCE—POWER OF COURT.

While the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1121, which limit the time that a superior judge may continue an election contest to 20 days, are merely directory, and their observance is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court to complete the hearing after an unwarranted continuance in a proceeding to contest an election to license the sale of intoxicating liquors, the court should conform to the law as closely as possible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 16*)—RIGHT TO WRIT.

Writ of mandate to compel a superior judge to set for trial a contest under an election, by the returns of which it appears that license for the sale of intoxicating liquors was authorized in the city, will not be issued, though the hearing was adjourned for a longer period than was authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1121, where it appears that on account of the delay incident to hearing of the mandamus proceedings petitioners would derive no appreciable advantage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

In Bank. Application by W. A. Moore and others for writ of mandate against William L. Conley, Judge of the Superior Court, County of Madera. Application denied.

Drew & Drew, of Fresno, for petitioners.

BEATTY, C. J. The opinion filed in this proceeding on August 26, 1912, is hereby corrected to read as follows: This is a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the setting of an election contest for trial. It appears from the petition that certain citizens and electors of the city of Madera instituted a regular proceeding to contest an election, by the returns of which it appeared that a majority of the votes were cast in favor of licensing the sale of alcoholic liquors in said city. Stats. of April 4, 1911, p. 599. The respondent, in conformity to the provisions of section 1118, Code of Civil Procedure, appointed the 23d day of July as the date for holding a special session of the court for a hearing of the contest, in pursuance of which order citations were issued and served upon the proper parties. At the time so fixed, the parties appeared; but the respondent, deeming himself disqualified, continued the hearing of the contest to September 11th, at which time one of the superior court judges of Los Angeles county had agreed to hear the contest.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1-3] In disposing of this petition for the writ, we shall assume merely that the facts stated by petitioners therein are true; this being as far as we may go, in the absence of any opportunity afforded the respondent to contest them, which, of course, would necessarily be the effect of a denial of the petition on the ex parte statements contained therein. Assuming, then, that the facts stated in the petition are true, this order was unauthorized, because the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1121) does not permit a continuance for more than 20 days, and, although these provisions are merely directory, and their observance not essential to the jurisdiction of the court to complete the hearing after an unwarranted continuance, it is nevertheless the duty of the court to conform to the law as far as possible. The case as presented would therefore warrant the issuance of the writ of mandate, if that course seemed to be necessary for the protection of the rights of the petitioners. But the petition for the writ was only filed here on August 20th, and since the hearing of the contest was already set for September 11th we have concluded that the issuance of an alternative writ, the return to which could not conveniently be heard before the next law day (September 4th), would be of no appreciable advantage to the petitioners, and that the emergency is not serious enough to justify such action.

For this reason the petition is denied.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 589

BROWN et al. v. SPENCER et al. (Sac. 1,923.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 26, 1912. Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1912.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 70*)—RESULTING TRUSTS.

Where purchasers of real estate obtained money to pay the price from a third person, who paid the vendor and took title under an agreement to hold the same until repayment of the loan, the third person became a trustee for the purchasers within Civ. Code, § 853, providing that, when a transfer of property is made to one person and the consideration is paid by another, a trust results in favor of the latter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 95-97; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7116-7124; vol. 8, p. 7822.]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 258*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE.

Where purchasers of real estate conveyed to a third person alleged that the third person advanced the price through her agent under an agreement that the title should be conveyed to her in trust for the purchasers, and it was not disputed that the money used to pay the price was paid by the agent, and that he obtained it from her, and there was evidence of declarations by her that after the transaction was completed she ratified the acts of the agent, there was sufficient prima facie proof of the agent's authority to loan her money, and take the deed to her as security, so that his declarations, constituting a part of the res gestæ, were binding on her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1006, 1007; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 22*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The declarations of an agent are not competent proof of agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 20*)—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where a debtor alleged that the loan was made by the creditor through a third person acting as her agent, and proved the declaration of the creditor to the effect that the agent transacted all her business, evidence that shortly before the loan the agent had loaned money of the principal to a third person, and had taken a mortgage from him in the principal's name as security, and that the creditor had either authorized such loan or approved of it, was admissible to prove agency, and to corroborate the creditor's declaration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 37, 38; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 87*)—EXISTENCE OF AGENCY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a suit to establish a resulting trust in favor of plaintiffs and two of defendants, based on the fact that plaintiffs and the two defendants purchased real estate which was conveyed to codefendant advancing the price and agreeing to hold the title in trust until repayment, plaintiffs alleged that the loan was made by a defendant acting as an agent of codefendant, the conversations between plaintiffs and such defendant and of the agreement between all the purchasers was admissible to show the history of the transaction, and to establish facts making it necessary to make two of the purchasers defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 129; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 56*)—PARTNERSHIP TO BUY AND SELL REAL ESTATE—ORAL AGREEMENTS.

An agreement to form a partnership to buy and sell real estate and build canals and ditches need not be in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 84-89, 136-138; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

7. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 116*)—AGENCY TO MAKE LOANS AND ACCEPT SECURITIES.

An agreement authorizing an agent to make a loan for his principal and accept title to land as security need not be created in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 251-260; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

8. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 69*) — TRANSACTIONS BY AGENT—VALIDITY.

A partner in a firm engaged in buying and selling real estate may act as agent of a third person in making a loan for her to the firm and accepting title to firm land as security, in the absence of fraud or bad conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-145; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

9. TRUSTS (§ 371*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—ACTION TO ENFORCE—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

There is no variance between a complaint alleging an express trust and the proof showing a resulting trust by operation of law from the facts pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 588-599; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

10. MONEY LENT (§ 1*)—IMPLIED PROMISE TO REPAY.

A loan of money raises an implied promise to repay it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Lent, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2, 4; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

11. TRUSTS (§ 70*) — MORTGAGES (§ 423*) — FORECLOSURE.

Where purchasers of real estate unable to pay the price obtained the money therefor from a third person to whom the property was conveyed under an agreement to hold the same until repayment, no further promise on the part of the third person was necessary to constitute a resulting trust, and the third person could enforce payment of the money by action after the lapse of a reasonable time, and in the meantime hold the land as security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 95-97; Dec. Dig. § 70.* Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1262; Dec. Dig. § 423.*]

12. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—CONCLUSION OF WITNESS—"POSSESSION."

In common usage, the word "possession" is often used as synonymous with "occupancy," and, when it is so used and understood in a question asked a witness, "Who had possession of the land?" the question is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2149-2185; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5464-5470; vol. 8, pp. 7757, 7758.]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS RULING ON EVIDENCE.

Where the facts relating to the possession of land were shown, the error in allowing a question asked a witness, "Who had possession of the land?" was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161-4170; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

14. TRUSTS (§ 372*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—ASSIGNMENTS OF RIGHTS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit to enforce a resulting trust in land, the complaint alleged a transfer by the beneficiary of his interest in the land to plaintiff, and no formal denial of the allegation was made, and the fact of the transfer was not disputed at the trial, and there was evidence of statements and conduct of the parties implying that the assignment had been made, a finding that an assignment had been made was supported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 600-603; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; A. M. Alberry, Judge.

Action by Thomas Brown and others against Eleanor Spencer and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

White, Miller & McLaughlin and B. F. Geis, for appellants. Frank Freeman and Charles L. Donohue, for respondents.

SIIAW, J. The defendants appeal from the judgment. The appeal was taken within 60 days after its entry. The evidence and proceedings at the trial are presented in a bill of exceptions.

The defendants Frank and John Spencer are the sons of defendant Eleanor Spencer. According to the allegations of the complaint, they are interested in common with the plaintiffs in the cause of action, and they are made parties defendant solely because they refuse to join as plaintiffs. The plaintiffs are Thomas Brown, David Brown, and Hochheimer & Co., a corporation. The transactions upon which the alleged trust arose occurred in 1901. At that time Hochheimer & Co. was a partnership. In 1903 a corporation under the name Hochheimer & Co., was organized, and thereupon the interest of said firm of Hochheimer & Co. was transferred to said corporation, one of the plaintiffs herein. We use the term "plaintiffs," without regard to this change of character.

It is claimed that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. As this is the main question in the case, and its determination will decide a number of alleged errors of law occurring at the trial, we take it up first. The plaintiffs and Frank and John Spencer were associated together in the business of buying and selling real estate and building canals and ditches. They had made an agreement to buy from one Ehorn a parcel of land at the price of $12,500. Frank and John Spencer had agreed to buy from one Sutton a contiguous parcel at the price of about $2,000. The parties did not have the money to pay for these lands, and thereupon it was agreed between them and Eleanor Spencer that she would loan to Frank, John, and the plaintiffs $12,178, being the amount necessary to complete the payment, that the purchase price should be paid with the money so loaned, that the lands should be conveyed to Eleanor Spencer as security for the money so loaned, and that she should thereupon hold the same in trust for Frank, John, and the plaintiffs until a reconveyance was demanded by them, or until the land should be sold, at which time the money was to be repaid to her with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Said Eleanor loaned the money, the purchase price of the parcels was paid therewith, and the conveyances thereof were made to said Eleanor, all in pursuance of and as provided in said agreement. This was accomplished on October 3, 1901. She has ever since that day held the title in trust under the agreement, but at that time the plaintiffs took possession of the lands and they have ever since held possession and have received the rents, issues, and profits thereof. It was agreed between Frank, John, and the plaintiffs that Frank and John should jointly own one-third of said parcels, Hochheimer & Co. one-third, and the two Browns one-third. The said Eleanor now claims absolute title and repudiates the trust relation. Plaintiffs have paid her $2,000 as interest, and have tendered her the amount due under the agreement, and are ready and willing to pay it upon a conveyance of the property to them by her. They did not know of her claim of absolute right, or discover that she denied their rights or repudiated the trust, until three days before the action was begun. It is not alleged that any written agreement was made by or for Eleanor in regard to the alleged trust in the land. We will assume that no such writing was executed. The above are the essential facts as alleged in the complaint. The prayer is for an accounting, for a determination of the amount due Eleanor, and for a decree declaring the interests of the respective parties in the lands, and that she holds them in trust for the other parties as alleged.

[1] The substance of the cause of action thus set forth is that the consideration for the transfer of the land was paid by Frank Spencer, John Spencer, and the plaintiffs, and the conveyance thereof was made to Eleanor Spencer. In such cases a trust is presumed to result in favor of the persons paying the consideration, and the grantee will be declared a trustee for them as to the land. Civil Code, § 853. The loan of the money by Eleanor to the purchasers was, in legal effect, a transfer of the money to them. The consequence was that, when the money was paid in settlement of the purchase price, it was their money, and not Eleanor's that was so paid. The fact that it was paid directly to the vendors by her agent does not alter the legal effect of the transaction. The transfer being made to Eleanor, she became a trustee holding title to the land for the other interested parties. No writing was necessary to create a trust of this character. It is a trust which the law implies from the facts of the case and may be created without writing. The case falls exactly within the rule of the aforesaid section of the Civil Code. Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 Pac. 113; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 99; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 139; Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 486; Walton v. Karnes, 67 Cal. 255, 7 Pac. 676; Ward v. Matthews, 73

Cal. 16, 14 Pac. 604; Hellman v. Messmer, 75 Cal. 170, 16 Pac. 766; Moultrie v. Wright, 154 Cal. 523, 98 Pac. 257; Title, etc., Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 491, 111 Pac. 360. Upon the facts alleged the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief prayed for.

The defendants answered separately. All the material allegations of the complaint necessary to the creation of the alleged trust were put in issue, except the allegation that the land was conveyed to Eleanor Spencer and the allegation that the money which paid for the land was obtained from her. Her claim is that she paid for the land as a purchaser, that there was no loan, and that she took the deed free from any trust. The findings are in favor of the plaintiffs. Judgment was given substantially as prayed for, directing the conveyance by Eleanor on payment of the amount found to be due her. The appellants claim that material errors of law occurred at the trial, and that the findings so far as they are against Eleanor are not sustained by the evidence.

[2] The plaintiffs allege that the loan was made by Eleanor Spencer through Frank Spencer, acting as her agent. There was proof of declarations by her, after the transaction was completed, that Frank had always transacted all of her business. It was not disputed that the money used to pay the purchase price was paid by Frank, and that he obtained it from her. She could not consistently claim otherwise, since her defense is that, although the money was paid by Frank, it was her own and was paid for her as the purchaser. There was also evidence of declarations by her showing that after the transaction was completed she had ratified the acts of Frank in the matter in her behalf, had accepted the transaction as a loan by her with the land as security, and was holding it in trust. This was sufficient prima facie proof of Frank's authority and agency to loan her money to himself and the other parties and take the deed to her as security. His agency being thus proven, there was no error in admitting in evidence testimony of declarations and statements made by him to his associates to the effect that she had the money to loan and was willing to make the loan to them on the terms stated and his further declarations and statements while the transaction was being carried on which were parts of the res gestæ thereof.

[3] His mere declarations would not have been competent proof of his agency, but, when the agency was proven by other evidence, his statements in the course of the transaction of the business in relation thereto were admissible in evidence as against her.

[4] Plaintiffs were allowed to prove that, shortly before the loan in question was made, Frank Spencer had loaned money for his mother to Ehorn, and had taken a mortgage from Ehorn in her name as security, and that she had been informed thereof and had either authorized it or approved it. This evidence was admissible to corroborate the evidence as to the declaration of Eleanor to the effect that Frank had always transacted all her business, and as evidence tending to prove his agency.

[5] The evidence of conversations between the plaintiffs and Frank and John Spencer by which the loan was negotiated and agreed to and the statements made to each other regarding it were necessary to show the nature and history of the transaction, and were admissible for that purpose. The proof of the agreement between them as to their respective interests in the land was proper, in order to establish the facts which made it necessary to name the two sons as defendants, instead of plaintiffs.

[6] The agreement between them made them all partners in the affair. No writing was necessary to create such partnership in real property. Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 787, 90 Pac. 135. And, as there was enough evidence to show that Frank was the agent of his mother to make a loan for her and accept the security, his statements to his associates in regard to it were properly admitted.

[7] We know of no authority to the effect that an agency to loan money and accept title to land as security must be created by writing.

[8] Nor is there any reason, in law, why Frank could not act as her agent in making the loan while he was also interested as a partner with those to whom the loan was made. Hemenway v. Abbott, 8 Cal. App. 461, 97 Pac. 190. She denied his authority as her agent, but she does not claim that there was any unfair advantage taken, or actual or constructive fraud against her in his conduct. The dual relation he held would be of no consequence unless such fraud or bad conduct was involved.

[9] There is no merit in the point that there is a variance because the complaint alleged an express trust and the proof shows only a resulting trust arising by operation of law. The resulting trust appears from the facts alleged and there is no variance. Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 578.

[10] The point that there was no promise alleged or proved to repay the money to Eleanor is also without merit. The loan of the money would of itself raise an implied promise, binding on them in law, to repay it. Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 691, 96 Pac. 357.

[11] No further promise was necessary to constitute the trust alleged. There was nothing unfair in the transaction as found by the court. She was free to enforce payment of the money with interest, by a proper action, after the lapse of a reasonable time for the borrowers to sell the land. Campbell v. Freeman, supra. In the meantime she held the land as security.

[12, 13] We cannot perceive that any prejudice to the appellants arose from the ruling allowing the answer to the question, "Who had possession of the land?" The question what constitutes possession is sometimes a question of law, and interrogatories put in this form have sometimes been condemned because the conclusion of the witness as to a matter of law was called for in answer to it. But in common usage the word "possession" is often used as synonymous with "occupancy," and, when it is so used and understood, the question as above given is not objectionable in form. It is usually within the discretion of the trial court to allow or reject it. In the present case the actual facts relating to possession were shown, and it is not necessary for us to determine the sense in which the word was used and understood, since no harm could have been caused by the answer.

[14] It is claimed that there was no evidence to support the allegation and finding that the partnership, Hochheimer & Co., transferred its interest in the land to the corporation, Hochheimer & Co. The fact of this change of the character of the plaintiffs was disclosed in the course of the trial and the allegation appears in an amendment to the complaint made at that time. No formal denial was filed to this amendment, but it was stated that it would be considered as denied. From the colloquy that took place it appears probable that this particular allegation was admitted. But, conceding that it also was denied, the fact appears to be that it was not really disputed at the trial, and there is ample evidence of statements and conduct of the parties which necessarily implied that such assignment had been made. This is sufficient to support the finding.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss further the points presented in the voluminous briefs of the appellants. All of the arguments relating to matters of substance are fully answered in the opinions of this court in the several cases which we have cited. The other points could not under any circumstances have prejudiced the appellants, and we do not deem it necessary to consider them.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELIOTTI, J.

(19 Cal. App. 497)

AMERICAN WELL & PROSPECTING CO.
v. SUPERIOR COURT OF KERN COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 1,196.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 18, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 19, 1912.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 35*)—COURT'S DISCRETION—DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF ATTACHMENT BOND.

The determination as to whether the amount of a bond in attachment should be raised on the motion of the owner of the property attached is within the discretion of the court, and mandamus will not, therefore, lie to control such determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 67; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

2. MOTIONS (§ 62*)—ORDER—CHARACTER OF COURT'S DECISION—EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

An order of court, made in response to a motion to require an increased undertaking in attachment, will import that it was made on the merits, and an expression of the court's opinion from the bench as to a lack of jurisdiction, being no part of the decision, would not change its character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Cent. Dig. §§ 84-87; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

Mandamus by the American Well & Prospecting Company against the Superior Court of Kern County and another. Application denied.

George E. Whitaker and T. N. Harvey, both of Bakersfield (Hunsaker & Britt, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner. Claflin & Owen, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The matter is presented upon a demurrer to the petition. It appears that the Midway Syndicate, Limited, brought an action against petitioner in the superior court of Kern county for the recovery of money. In aid of its action plaintiff sued out a writ of attachment, and, as required by the clerk of the court, gave an undertaking in the sum of $200, all in conformity with the provisions of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The writ was placed in the hands of the sheriff, who, by virtue thereof and as instructed by plaintiff, levied the same upon two rotary oil-drilling rigs belonging to petitioner, the defendant in said action. Thereafter, pursuant to notice, petitioner moved the court for an order increasing the amount of the undertaking from $200 to $30,000; the ground therefor being that the sum of $200 specified in the undertaking was inadequate to compensate defendant therein for damages which would be sustained by reason of the levy so made upon the property of petitioner. In support of the motion petitioner offered the files and records of the case and an affidavit tending to show the inadequacy of the undertaking, in that petitioner was then engaged as a contractor in the business of drilling oil wells, that he had no other drilling outfits in Kern county than those attached, and that by reason of being deprived of the use of the drilling rigs so levied upon he would be unable to perform certain contracts, which fact would entail a loss to him in the sum of $20,000, and that possibly he would be subjected to damage suits for breach of contract. Upon a hearing of the motion the court made an order in general terms denying the same.

[1] The question presented by the motion was one of fact, calling for an exercise of judicial discretion on the part of the court in deciding the same. The law is well settled that in such case mandamus will not lie to control the action of the court.

[2] Nor do we understand that petitioner controverts this proposition. Its contention is that the court did not decide the matter upon its merits, but held that the court was without jurisdiction to pass upon the question. This contention is based upon an allegation of the petition "that his (petitioner's) aforesaid application was not considered or denied by the court on its merits, but that said order was so made and entered for the reason that, in the opinion of the court, under the law, the action of the clerk in fixing the amount of the undertaking and accepting it was final, and not subject to review by the court, and that, the clerk having fixed said undertaking at $200 and accepted the same, the court had no authority, under the law, to require the plaintiff in said action to give an additional or increased undertaking." But, as stated, the order was general, made in response to the motion, and assuming, as claimed by petitioner, that the court had jurisdiction, it was made upon the merits, and, being that of a court of general jurisdiction, it imports absolute verity. The plain import of its language cannot be contradicted, nor its effect qualified or limited in the manner here proposed in a proceeding of this character. As is frequently said, the opinion of the court, expressed from the bench in deciding a case, is no part of its decision.

In denying the writ, we do so upon the assumption, without so deciding (such decision not being necessary to a determination of the case), that the court had jurisdiction to hear the motion upon its merits. If it did not have jurisdiction, clearly petitioner is not entitled to the writ. On the contrary, if it possessed jurisdiction, the order shows that its determination was made upon the merits. If as a matter of fact the action of the court was had and taken upon the ground of want of jurisdiction, as alleged in the petition, then it should have refused to hear the motion, and dismissed it, or, in other appropriate language, stated that the action was based upon want of jurisdiction.

The application for the writ is denied.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(19 Cal. App. 501)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. GOLDEN. (Civ. 918.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 22, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 20, 1912.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 151*)—NEGOTIABILITY—CONDITIONS OF PAYMENT—ORDERS.

An order drawn by one on his deposit in a savings bank, which, though on its face payable on demand, was, by reason of a requirement of the bank not to be paid till after 30 days' notice to it, and by condition of the deposit required presentment with it of the depositor's passbook, of which facts its indorsee had notice, is merely a nonnegotiable chose in action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 380-387; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 275*)—NONNEGOTIABLE ORDER—DEFENSES AGAINST INDORSEE.

An order for payment of money, a nonnegotiable chose in action, without consideration, as between the drawer and payee, because of fraudulent representations on which it was given, is taken by its indorsee with the equities charged against it in the hands of the payee, unless the drawer is estopped to set up such equities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 738-741; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 353*)—NONNEGOTIABLE ORDER—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—CONSIDERATION—EXTENSION OF TIME.

R. having given plaintiff his check for the amount of his indebtedness to it, and payment of the check having been refused for lack of funds, being pressed to make good the amount of the check, he obtained of defendant an order payable to him on defendant's deposit in a savings bank, which on its face was payable on demand, but, solely by reason of the bank having availed itself of the right to require 30 days' notice of withdrawal, was not to be paid for 30 days, and indorsed it to plaintiff. Held that, within the rule that, where one purchases in good faith and for value a nonnegotiable chose in action from one to whom the owner has transferred the apparent ownership, he obtains by estoppel a valid title, plaintiff parted with no value when he took the order; the order not being taken as a substitute for the original debt, there being no agreement to extend the time of payment, and no such extension resulting as a matter of law from the transaction, or, if resulting merely by operation of law, not being value within the rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 898-903½, 906; Dec. Dig. § 353.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of San Francisco against William K. Golden. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cushing & Cushing, of San Francisco, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin and F. S. Brittain, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. In this case a rehearing was granted, but after further consideration, with some minor changes and with the citation of additional authorities, we adhere to our original position. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Prior to the 26th day of December, 1907, F. H. Rowe was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,825. On that date Rowe gave the plaintiff his check on the Canadian Bank of Commerce for the sum of $1,000, and the time for payment of the balance was extended to January 25, 1908. When this check was presented to the Canadian Bank of Commerce, it was refused payment for lack of funds to the credit of the maker. Between the 26th and 28th of December the plaintiff was pressing Rowe to make good the amount of the check. On the latter date Rowe, in company with the defendant, Golden, called at the bank of plaintiff, and Rowe stated that he was unable to raise the money to meet the check, but that Golden would give the plaintiff an order drawn upon his deposit in the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society for $1,000. Rowe called attention to the fact that said loan society, owing to the financial stringency prevailing at that time, was demanding of its depositors 30 days' notice before paying sums of $1,000 or over. To this observation the plaintiff, through its vice president, replied: "That is all right. We are quite willing to wait 30 days on the Hibernia Bank, as we know they are absolutely good." Thereupon an order or check in favor of Rowe was drawn by Golden upon said Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, which Rowe transferred to plaintiff by indorsement. Under the conditions upon which deposits are accepted by said society, they can be withdrawn only upon presentation of the depositors' passbook. Accordingly Golden's passbook was delivered to the plaintiff, and both the order and passbook were, on December 30, 1907, presented by the plaintiff to one of the tellers of the society, who in effect acknowledged receipt of the 30 days' notice of withdrawal.

Prior to the 26th day of December, 1907, Rowe and one W. P. McFaul, claiming to be the authorized agents of the Howard Creek Lumber Company, a corporation, were endeavoring to sell to Golden a tract of timber land in Mendocino county together with a sawmill thereon. They represented that this land was thickly covered with practically virgin timber, mostly redwood; that the mill was in first-class condition, and capable of producing from 20,000 to 25,000 feet of lumber daily. Rowe also represented that he was on a sound financial basis, and responsible for any paper he might sign. He referred Golden to Bradstreet's Book, wherein it was estimated that Rowe's resources were about $35,000. On the strength of these representations, and also believing, as he had been told by Rowe, that some one else was likely to purchase the land. Golden, at the suggestion of Rowe, consented to make a payment of $1,000 on the land and mill, with the understanding that he was to have 10 days to decide whether he would purchase the property; that if he decided not to proceed with the transaction the $1,000 was to be repaid to him within 60 days. This contract was reduced to writing December 27th, and on the following morning Rowe and Golden met to arrange for this conditional payment. At that time Rowe remarked to Golden that he had a slight overdraft at the bank of plaintiff, and desired "to make a deposit to show that everything was coming out all right—that he was doing business." Arriving at the bank, Golden made the check or order on the Hibernia Society to which reference has already been made and under the circumstances described.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

On the afternoon of the same day Golden went to Mendocino county to inspect the property forming the subject of the negotiation, and found that it had been misrepresented to him in material respects. Within the 10 days he gave notice to Rowe that the proposition was rejected, and, having learned that Rowe had filed a petition in bankruptcy, he stopped the payment of the order on the Hibernia Society and notified plaintiff that he had done so. January 30, 1908, payment of the draft was refused accordingly, and written notice of protest was served on the parties thereto. August 18, 1908, the plaintiff filed a claim against the bankrupt estate of Rowe for the full amount of the indebtedness, to wit, $3,825, not waiving, however, any of its rights under the draft on the Hibernia Society.

A stipulation has been entered into by the parties to this action, under which, if it shall be decided that either the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society or Golden is liable on the check, judgment shall go against Golden. The trial court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and caused judgment to be entered in favor of Golden and against plaintiff, from which judgment, and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

A witness for the plaintiff testified that it would not have accepted the Golden check for collection, and from other circumstances in the case it is clear that the plaintiff did not receive it merely for that purpose. Nor is it seriously claimed that the check was accepted by the plaintiff as a payment on account of Rowe's indebtedness. The worthless check on the Bank of Commerce was not turned over to Rowe or Golden. No entry in the books of the plaintiff, or act of its officers, indicates that it was so accepted. It was apparently taken by the plaintiff to be applied in reduction of Rowe's indebtedness when collected. Doubtless, if this check had been paid, the amount thereof would have been indorsed on the instrument evidencing Rowe's indebtedness to the bank and treated as payment, but not otherwise.

[1] This order on the Hibernia Society was not unconditional and free from any other contract. It follows that it was not negotiable. While upon its face it was payable upon demand, it was in fact not to be paid until 30 days' notice was given to the drawee, and its payment was also conditional upon its being accompanied by the drawer's passbook. In view of these conditions—notice of which was brought home to the plaintiff—it cannot be held, as asserted by plaintiff, that the draft was negotiable. Civ. Code, §§ 3087, 3088, 3090, 3093. In the case of White v. Cushing, 88 Me. 339, 34 Atl. 164, 32 L. R. A. 590, 51 Am. St. Rep. 402, the court, in passing upon the effect of an order containing the words, "The bank book of the depositor must accompany this order," held that without these words the order was payable absolutely and was negotiable; that with those words it was payable only upon the condition of the production of the drawer's bank book. "It must, therefore," says the court, "be held that the contingency embarrasses and obstructs the free circulation of the order for commercial purposes, rendering it not negotiable." See, also, Yeaton v. Bank of Alexandria, 5 Cranch, 51, 3 L. Ed. 33; Davis v. Bank, 118 Cal. 600, 50 Pac. 666; Union Ins. Co. v. American F. Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 327, 40 Pac. 431, 28 L. R. A. 692, 48 Am. St. Rep. 140; Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 Pac. 371; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916; Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 11 Sup. Ct. 1, 34 L. Ed. 568; Lillard v. Kentucky, 134 Fed. 168, 67 C. C. A. 74; Mills v. Bank of U. S., 11 Wheat. 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. 25, 7 L. Ed. 37; Iron City Nat. Bank v. McCord, 139 Pa. 52, 21 Atl. 143, 11 L. R. A. 559, 23 Am. St. Rep. 166.

[2] It appears to us to be clear that the Golden draft was a nonnegotiable chose in action, and that, owing to the fraudulent representation of Rowe, it was given by him without consideration as between him and Golden. We are also of the opinion that plaintiff took it with the equities charged against it in the hands of Rowe (Civ. Code, §§ 1083, 1459; Wright v. Levy, 12 Cal. 257; Mohr v. Byrne, 135 Cal. 87, 67 Pac. 11), unless Golden, on some application of the principle of estoppel, is prevented from setting up those equities.

[3] It is true that where one purchases in good faith and for value a chose in action, not negotiable, from one to whom the owner has transferred the apparent ownership, he obtains a valid title against such owner, even though the person from whom he so obtained it had no title. In Thompson v.

Toland, 48 Cal. 99, it was held that the owner of mining stock, who allowed his broker to hold the certificates therefor in his own name as security for the balance due thereon—nothing appearing on the face of the certificates to indicate that the real owner had any interest therein—would be estopped from asserting his title against a purchaser in good faith and without notice. "Under such circumstances," says the court, at page 112, "the party who places another in a position to enable him to practice the fraud should suffer the loss, rather than an innocent person who deals with him on the faith of the usual indicia of ownership with which the true owner has vested him." But the circumstances of this case hardly bring it within the rule declared in those decisions. Here the plaintiff took without notice of the fraud perpetrated on Golden by Rowe; and notwithstanding the uncontradicted evidence of Golden to the contrary, the court found that the plaintiff had no actual notice that the payment by Golden was conditional. But, we think, that plaintiff parted with no value when it took the draft.

Appellant, however, contends to the contrary, and argues that by the mere receipt of the order drawn by Golden on the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society the appellant extended the time to pay Rowe's debt to it, and thereby parted with value and placed itself at a disadvantage. This contention is rested upon a long line of cases in this state holding that, where a creditor receives upon an antecedent debt already matured the note of a debtor or of a third person, payable at a future date, although the debt is not thereby extinguished, the acceptance of the new obligation payable in futuro operates as an implied extension of the time of payment of the original debt. "It extends the time for payment until the maturing of the new note, or, as it is said, 'suspends' the remedy upon the old note, but does not extinguish it." Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 287, 24 Pac. 743, 745, and cases cited.

But this rule applies only to that class of cases in which the new obligation is accepted by the creditor as conditional payment of the original debt, or in which the new obligation, "for the time being, at least, is to take the place of and represent the original debt. That class is distinguishable from, and not to be confounded with, the class where the creditor has accepted simply a new additional or collateral security for an antecedent debt. In the former transaction an agreement to give time may be implied, but not out of the latter transaction." Austin v. Curtis, 31 Vt. 64, 76. In the case just cited the authorities which make and illustrate the distinction between the two classes of cases are discussed at length. The distinction, however, is apparent, and based upon obvious grounds of difference. If a creditor holds a note of his debtor which has already matured, and accepts in lieu thereof a new note payable a year later, it is plain that the new note is a substitution for the old obligation, and the reasonable implication from its acceptance is that the creditor has extended the time of payment of the debt. If, on the other hand, without any idea of substituting it for the old debt, or of treating it as a payment, conditional or otherwise, until collected, a creditor accepts from his debtor the check or order of a third person, payable in futuro, or any instrument offered and received merely to further assure or secure payment of the debt, it would do violence to the intent of the parties to hold that, by the acceptance of such additional security, the creditor has extended the primary debt, and cannot collect from his debtor until his security has matured.

A class of cases in which this distinction is frequently drawn is that in which a surety contends that he has been released by the extension of the debt without his consent. In those cases it is held that there is no extension of time to the principal to be implied "merely by the creditor taking a new security maturing after the debt becomes due, such as a mortgage, a guaranty, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or an order of a third person; nor is an extension effected by taking a bond or note of the principal as collateral security, or a note or bill of exchange of the principal for the purpose of having the proceeds thereof, when obtained, applied on the original indebtedness, although such action has been taken by the principal with the expectation that the creditor will refrain from pressing him for immediate payment." 32 Cyc. 211, and numerous cases cited.

As already said, the facts of the present case show plainly that the order of Golden on the Hibernia Bank was not received by plaintiff from Rowe as in any way substitutional for the original debt, or as anything but additional security, the proceeds of which, when collected, were to be applied on the debt. No credit was allowed by the bank to Rowe at the time it received the order and passbook of Golden. It intended to apply the money on the debt when collected, and not before. Collection of the order could not be enforced for 30 days, but not because any of the parties desired to postpone its payment for that time, nor because it was made in pursuance of any agreement for a 30 days' extension of time. The sole reason was that the savings bank had availed itself of the right to require 30 days' notice of withdrawals. Under these circumstances we do not think that from the mere receipt of the order any agreement to extend the time of payment can be implied, and we are of the opinion that no such extension resulted as a matter of law from the transaction.

Even, however, if it could be held that, regardless of the intention of the parties, such an extension resulted as a matter of law, we would, nevertheless, be inclined to hold that this would not suffice to show that plaintiff has suffered any prejudice which would entitle it to rely upon the rule protecting that one of two innocent parties who had suffered through the fraud of a third person clothed with the apparent ownership by the other innocent party. A similar question was presented in Ingenhuett v. Hunt, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 248, 39 S. W. 310. In that case Hunt owed the plaintiff a certain sum, which was overdue, and Hunt and his sister executed a note payable three years after date for the amount of the debt. To secure this new note, the sister executed a mortgage on certain land, which it was claimed by the intervener was held by her as trustee for him. The court, after holding that the trust in the land had been shown, next considered whether the plaintiff could be protected as a lienholder without notice, who had parted with value. After observing that the note extended the time of payment for three years on its face, the court conceded that "where a mortgage is given to secure a past-due indebtedness, and as a consideration entering into the transaction the time of payment is extended, the lienholder is protected against unknown equities for the reason that he has, by contract, parted with a valuable right" (citing cases). The opinion, however, continues: "An extension may not be contracted for, and yet given. According to the testimony of S. P. Hunt and Mrs. Hunt, nothing was said about an extension, and the note and mortgage were signed as presented to them by appellant's agent, and there was no other consideration for the note and deed of trust than the past indebtedness, and the sole purpose of the transaction was to secure appellant's demand. In other words, the fair inference from this testimony is that the note and mortgage were executed without reference to further time. If this were so, we believe the case would not come within the rule above expressed. If, without any arrangement or stipulation for that purpose, the giving of time by drawing the note payable at three years was the gratuitous act of the appellant, not induced or asked by defendants, he could not say that he had, through contract, suspended or surrendered his right to enforce payment of the account."

The facts of this case are even stronger. Here the order on its face was payable at once. If collection could not be at once enforced, it was not because any of the parties desired to postpone its maturity, but because, under unusual circumstances, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society had availed itself of its right to require notice of withdrawals. As in the Texas case, therefore, the order was accepted "without reference to further time," and under circumstances from which no agreement for the extension of time of the principal debt can be implied, or from which equity would raise an estoppel. It may well be that the practical effect of the transaction was to assure Rowe that the bank would not press him for an immediate payment, but this was not because of any agreement for extension, nor because the bank, by receiving the order, had "suspended" its remedy on his debt. "If the new security is but additional and collateral to the old, I think it may well be said that the effect of taking the new security on time does not prove a promise to give time, but doubtless may furnish ground for an expected indulgence which the principal debtor is bound to treat as being at all times countermandable at the will of the creditor." Austin v. Curtis, supra.

Indeed, in every case where a new source of payment is given to a creditor, "not in lieu of or suspension of the old notes, but in addition to them, as a further security," the debtor may reasonably expect not to be pressed for payment until the security is realized upon; but in such case he trusts, "not to any legal change in the rights and remedies of the plaintiff's on the old notes, but to such indulgence as creditors are likely to grant when they feel assured of ultimate payment." Dodson v. Taylor, 56 N. J. Law, 11, 28 Atl. 316. The evidence supports the findings, and the findings, in turn, sustain the judgment.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

(19 Cal. App. 548)

GARDNER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 1,194.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
California. July 23, 1912.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 3*)—OFFENSES UNDER JUVENILE COURT ACT—PRACTICE.

Pen. Code, § 682, providing "every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except * * * 4. All misdemeanors of which jurisdiction has been conferred on superior courts sitting as juvenile courts"—but not providing any mode of procedure as to the excepted cases, does authorize trial by the superior court, sitting as a juvenile court, on a complaint filed in such court, for the misdemeanor which Juvenile Court Act (St. 1911, p. 672) § 26 defines and provides that the juvenile court shall have jurisdiction of, as, even if Code Civ. Proc. § 187, providing that a court having jurisdiction to try a case may adopt any suitable mode therefor conformable to the spirit of the Code, applies, such provision is limited to those cases where no course of procedure is pointed out by the Code or some statute; and Pen. Code, § 888, designates a complete mode of procedure by providing that all public offenses triable in the superior court must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except as provided in section 889, which refers only to accusations filed in the superior court for removal of officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-23; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. STATUTES (§§ 76, 98*) — SPECIAL LAWS — PRACTICE OF COURTS.

Pen. Code, § 682, subd. 4, added by St. 1911, p. 68, if construed as authorizing prosecutions on a complaint filed in the superior court of misdemeanors of which jurisdiction has been conferred on superior courts, sitting as juvenile courts, while a general law (section 888) provides for all prosecutions in the superior court being on indictment or information, contravenes Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3, prohibiting special laws regulating the practice of courts of justice, and also subdivision 33, prohibiting special laws when a general law can be made applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 77½, 78½, 110, 111; Dec. Dig. §§ 76, 98.*]

3. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Though a trial for a misdemeanor on a complaint filed in the superior court would be beyond its jurisdiction, prohibition will not lie; there being an adequate remedy by appeal from any adverse judgment on the prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-19; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Petition by John D. Gardner and another for writ of prohibition to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge. Writ denied.

Charles S. McKelvey, of Los Angeles, for petitioners. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and H. S. G. McCartney, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. [1] This is an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court, sitting as a juvenile court of Los Angeles county, from proceeding further in the trial of an action wherein the people of the state constitute the plaintiff, and the petitioners are defendants. The action was instituted by filing a verified complaint in said court, charging petitioners with the commission of the misdemeanor defined by section 26 of the juvenile court act. Stats. 1911, p. 672. The right to the writ is based upon the claim that the verified complaint filed in the superior court was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to try petitioners for the offense charged therein.

Section 26 of the juvenile court act, which defines the misdemeanor in question, provides that "the juvenile court shall have jurisdiction of all such misdemeanors." Section 682 of the Penal Code provides: "Every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except: 1. Where proceedings are had for the removal of civil officers of the state. 2. Offenses arising in the militia when in actual service, and in the land and naval forces in time of war, or which the state may keep, with the consent of Congress, in time of peace. 3. Offenses tried in justices and police courts. 4. All misdemeanors of which jurisdiction has been conferred upon superior courts sitting as juvenile courts." Subdivision 4 was added by the amendment of 1911. St. 1911, p. 68. It is under and by virtue of this last subdivision of section 682 that respondents claim the right to prosecute petitioners upon the complaint filed in the superior court. Petitioners, however, contend that the exception provided by subdivision 4 is unconstitutional, in that it is repugnant to subdivisions 3 and 33 of section 25, art. 4, of the Constitution, which provide: "The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Third. Regulating the practice of courts of justice. * * * Thirty-third. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." While section 682 provides that every public offense, except those enumerated in subdivisions 1, 2, 3, and 4, must be prosecuted by indictment or information, it does not make, or purport to make, any provision for the prosecution of cases falling within the enumerated exceptions. The section is permissive in declaring that such prosecutions need not be by indictment or information; but it does not in terms forbid the same, or define any other mode of practice for the cases so excepted. Other sections of the Code, however, prescribe the pleadings and procedure to be followed in cases classed as 1, 2, and 3; but nothing in the juvenile act, nor in the Penal Code, other than section 888 thereof, purports to provide a procedure for the prosecution of the misdemeanor with which petitioners are charged. While section 1426, Penal Code, authorizes the prosecution of misdemeanors in justices' courts upon a verified complaint, we find no like provision which in terms authorizes a prosecution in the superior court upon such pleading. Hence it follows that if it cannot be prosecuted by indictment or information, as provided by section 888, the law in terms makes no provision for the trial of such cases. Assuming that section 187, Code of Civil Procedure, applies, which application may be doubted under section 31, Code of Civil Procedure, nevertheless the provision therein, that a court vested with jurisdiction to try a case may adopt any suitable mode therefor conformable to the spirit of the Code, is limited to those cases where no course of procedure is pointed out by the Code or some statute. Section 888 specifically points out and designates a complete mode of procedure. It expressly provides that "all public offenses triable in the superior courts must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except as provided in the next section," which next section refers to accusations filed in the superior court for the removal of officers in accordance with sections 758 and 759, Penal Code.

[2] In our opinion, subdivision 4 of section 682 cannot be construed as authorizing the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

prosecution and trial of petitioners on a verified complaint filed in the superior court. Moreover, such interpretation given the section would, in our judgment, render it repugnant to subdivision 3 of section 25, art. 4, of the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature from passing special laws "regulating the practice of courts of justice," as well as render it obnoxious to subdivision 33 of said section, which prohibits the passage of a special law "where a general law can be made applicable." Not only does a general law exist (section 888) which is applicable to the prosecution of all misdemeanors, jurisdiction of which is vested in the superior courts, but the provision accepting the interpretation of subdivision 4, § 682, as construed by respondents to authorize a prosecution of misdemeanors arising under section 26 of the juvenile act by complaint, is an attempt to provide and apply to such cases a special and different procedure than that prescribed by general law for the prosecution of like misdemeanors triable in the superior court. In the present case there is no conceivable reason why the prosecution of the misdemeanor in question should not be subject to the general rules in regard to pleadings and procedure made applicable to all misdemeanors triable in the superior court. City of Tulare v. Heyren, 126 Cal. 226, 58 Pac. 530, and cases cited. In the case of Edgington v. Superior Court, 124 Pac. 450, the petitioner was charged with a like misdemeanor as that here involved, and prosecuted under an information filed after a preliminary examination was accorded him. He asked for a writ of prohibition, upon the ground that the filing of the information was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to try the case, claiming that the action should be commenced by the filing of a verified complaint. The court denied the writ and, for reasons other than those which appeal to us, held that the filing of the information was sufficient to vest the court with jurisdiction to try the case. In the Mills Sing Case, 13 Cal. App. 740, 110 Pac. 694, this court said: "The juvenile act making the offense under consideration triable in the superior court, section 888 of the Penal Code applies, which provides that all public offenses triable in the superior court must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except as to accusations for the removal of certain officers. Section 809 of the Penal Code directs the filing of an information after commitment by a magistrate; and section 950, Penal Code, specifies what such information must contain. It follows, therefore, that the preliminary examination and commitment are precedent conditions to the information upon which, and upon which only, can the superior court proceed to try one charged with a public offense, even though it be a misdemeanor." In our judgment, the verified complaint filed in the superior court is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to try petitioners for the offense charged. The prosecution in such case must, as required by section 888, Penal Code, if not by indictment, be conducted under an information, as a prerequisite to the issuance of which the accused is entitled (section 8, art. 1, of the Constitution) to a preliminary examination and commitment, provision for which is made in sections 858 and 883 of the Penal Code, and which is applicable alike to the misdemeanor with which petitioners are charged, as well as to all others, jurisdiction to try which is vested in the superior court.

[3] The writ of prohibition, however, will not issue for want of jurisdiction alone. It must be made to appear that the petitioner applying therefor is without any "plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." Section 1103, Code Civ. Proc. Conceding, therefore, that a trial of petitioners, if had upon the verified complaint filed in the superior court, would be in excess of the court's jurisdiction, it does not follow that they would be entitled to the writ prayed for. They would have an adequate remedy by appeal from any adverse judgment rendered against them. This being true, the want of jurisdiction, in the absence of facts or circumstances showing the inadequacy of the remedy by appeal (Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 478, 82 Pac. 70; Craycroft v. Superior Court, 124 Pac. 1042), does not entitle them to the writ. Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 Pac. 765.

The writ is, therefore, denied.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

19 Cal. App. 562

SACRAMENTO TERMINAL CO. v. McDOUGALL. (Civ. 984.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 29, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 27, 1912.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 124*)—DAMAGES—ACCRUAL—TIME—STATUTES—APPEAL—"AFFECT."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, prior to the amendment of April 10, 1911, provided that in condemnation proceedings the right to damages should be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and the actual value at that date should be the measure of compensation. By St. 1911, p. 842, the section was amended by adding a proviso that if the issue is not tried within one year after the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial, but that nothing in the section contained should be construed to affect pending litigation. Held, that the word "affect" was used in the proviso in its ordinary significance as meaning "to influence," "to produce an effect upon," "to act upon," and hence the amendment did not repeal the section as it previously existed with reference to pending litigation, so that in such a proceeding in which the trial was had within a year from the time of the filing of the complaint the damages were properly assessed as of the date of the summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-344; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 238, 239.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 71*)—STATUTES—VALUE OF PROPERTY—DATE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, as amended by St. 1911, p. 842, in so far as it authorizes the fixing of compensation or damages in condemnation proceedings as of the date of the summons, is not unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 180-187; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Sacramento Terminal Company against D. McDougall, as administrator, etc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. B. Bradford, B. F. Driver, and White, Miller & McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for appellant. Chas. W. Slack, of San Francisco, and Arthur Seymour, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is in eminent domain. The complaint was filed and summons issued on October 21, 1910, and the action was tried before a jury September 21, 1911, resulting favorably to plaintiff. The only question involved on the appeal is as to the date at which the value of the property was to be determined. Defendant sought to interrogate witnesses as to the value of the property at the time of the trial, and requested the court to instruct the jury that they should find its value at that time as damages to be allowed the defendant, but the court adopted the theory that the law fixed the date of the issuance of the summons as the time to which the inquiry should be directed. The contention of appellant grows out of the consideration that section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended on April 10, 1911, while the present action was pending. Prior to said amendment the section read: "For the purpose of ascertaining compensation and damages the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and the actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation." The section as amended (Stats. 1911, p. 842) provides that: "Section twelve hundred and forty-nine of the Code of Civil Procedure is hereby amended to read as follows: For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages the right thereof shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the issuance of summons and its actual value at that date shall be deemed the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken * * * Provided, that in any case in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed or held to affect pending litigation." It is to be observed that, under the operation of said amended statute, the rule still applies requiring the determination of the value as of the date of the summons except where the action is not tried within one year. The present action is not within the exception since the trial was had within one year from the time of the filing of the complaint. It is therefore clear that, under the application of said section 1249, as it was either prior or subsequent to said amendment, the position taken by the court below must be sustained. It is urged, however, by appellant, that since the Legislature repealed the old section 1249 and substituted the new section 1249 and therein excepted from its operation pending actions, as to such actions there is no statutory rule, and that, under a fair construction of the constitutional provision that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use, without just compensation having first been made to or paid into court for the owner," it should be held that "just compensation means value at the time when right to take and quantity to be taken is determined by trial on issues tendered, and not fictional arbitrary time when nothing is or can be taken, and the right to take lies in mere assertion, the action betimes being dismissible according to the caprice of plaintiff."

[1] It must be admitted that counsel for appellant in arguing for their contention have displayed no little industry and ingenuity. We are however convinced that the legislative intent, as manifested in said amended section 1249, was not to disturb the law of damages as it had theretofore existed as far as "pending" actions are concerned. It may be conceded that such legislative intent could have been more aptly expressed, but it is believed that the only reasonable construction of the section is as contended for by respondent. In other words, the clause in controversy operates as a "saving clause." The effect of it is to preserve in force the previous statute as far as pending litigation is concerned. It prevents the law from being retroactive. When the Legislature declared that "nothing in this section contained shall be construed or held to affect pending litigation," it simply meant that the section was not designed to change the existing order of things as to such cases. Appellant's construction of the word "affect," as pointed out by respondent, would attribute to it the meaning, "to lay down the law for" or "to establish rules applicable to." Hence, the clause is interpreted as though it meant: "Nothing in this section shall be construed as laying down the law for or establishing rules applicable to pending litigation." But we must assume that the word was used in its ordinary signification, "to influence," "to produce an effect upon," "to act upon." But it is obvious that in this sense of the term the section would "affect" pending litigation if it operated to change the law of damages in force at the time said amendment went into effect. It is equally clear that the new section would not affect "pending" litigation if the old law is applied to such litigation. It is apparent, in this connection, that the amended section would affect pending litigation whether it simply repealed the existing law in relation thereto or provided another law for the control of such litigation. An illustration of the extremity to which appellant's contention would lead is furnished by respondent as follows: "Section 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes that 'no action or proceeding commenced before this Code takes effect, and no right accrued, is affected by its provisions.'" Section 6 of the Civil Code is of the same import. "According to the owner's contention, if an action had been started before the Civil Code took effect on a right theretofore given by statute and the statute had been superseded by the provisions of the Code which had made no changes in the law, the right of the plaintiff would have been destroyed, because the statute upon which his right was founded has been repealed and section 6 of the Civil Code provided that 'no action or proceeding commenced before this Code takes effect, and no right accrued is affected by its provisions.' There was, therefore, no law under which the plaintiff could have proceeded. The fallacy of such a construction and course of reasoning is apparent. What purpose would section 6 of the Civil Code fill if construed according to the owner's theory? The result of giving the section such a construction would have been to destroy utterly all rights and proceedings pending at the time of the adoption of the Code, although it is plain that the Legislature intended by this very section to save them all."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It would seem that the citation of any authority is hardly needed in support of respondent's position. We may refer, though, to two cases to which attention is directed in the brief. In Commonwealth v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 30, 11 Am. Rep. 304, the repealing statute provided that "nothing contained in this act shall affect any prosecution now pending or any penalty or forfeiture already incurred under the provisions of any law in force prior to the passage of this act." The court held that the repealing statute contained a saving clause which prevented the operation of the repeal and continued the repealed law in force as to all cases to which it referred. The same result is reached, though by a somewhat different train of reasoning, in the case of People v. Sutter Street Ry. Co., 117 Cal. 604, 49 Pac. 736. There the saving clause in the amendatory act was: "Provided further that this act shall not affect any franchise or right of way granted before its passage." In the opinion it is declared that "the effect, then, of the provision above quoted is that the new provisions do not affect existing franchises; that as to them the board cannot extend the time for completion. But the clause declaring the forfeiture has not been repealed." It can obviously make no possible difference here whether we accept as technically sound the statement of the court in said case, quoting from Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 598, that "the portions of the amended section which are copied without change are not to be considered as repealed and re-enacted, but to have been the law all along." In that view, as we have seen from a comparison of the old section and the new, the law governing the present case was correctly declared by the lower court. But, accepting the principle of a repeal and re-enactment, it is clear from the saving clause that there was no repeal as to pending litigation.

We need not consider the further contention of respondent that, "even if there were no statute applicable at all the rule applied is the general rule existing in the absence of statute."

[2] The interesting argument of appellant to the point that a statute fixing the date of the issuance of the summons as the time for the determination of the value of the property is unconstitutional we may also pass by for the reason stated in Los Angeles v. Gager, 10 Cal. App. 378, 102 Pac. 17, that "the Supreme Court of this state has, since 1882, repeatedly and uniformly held to the contrary. California Southern R. Co. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90; Tehama v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57 [8 Pac. 673]; San Jose, etc., Ry. Co. v. Mayne, 83 Cal. 566 [23 Pac. 522]; City of Santa Ana v. Brunner, 132 Cal. 234 [64 Pac. 287]; Pacific Coast Ry. Co. v. Porter, 74 Cal. 261 [15 Pac. 774]; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597 [57 Pac. 585]."

We think the ruling of the lower court was clearly correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

19 Cal. App. 555

PEOPLE v. WHITE. (Cr. 247.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 25, 1912. Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1912; Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 23, 1912.)

1. ARSON (§ 37*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a conviction of arson.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arson, Cent. Dig. §§ 71-73; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 478*)—EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY.

A dealer in new and secondhand furniture is competent to testify to the fair cash market value of furniture installed in a house; and the mere fact that his examination of the furniture was limited goes to the weight of his testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1065, 1066; Dec. Dig. § 478.*]

3. ARSON (§ 34*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for arson, the evidence showed that accused took out fire policies on his furniture for $1,500, while the market value thereof was only $275, and there was nothing to show that the property possessed a special value by reason of being installed in his home, the market value was a circumstance bearing on his guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arson, Cent. Dig. §§ 59-69; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for arson, the evidence conclusively showed that the fire was of incendiary origin, a charge that, to constitute a burning, it was not necessary that the building set on fire should be destroyed, but it was sufficient that the fire was applied so as to take effect on any part of the substance of the building, was not prejudicial to accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3136, 3169; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 268*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE.

Where, on a trial for arson, a witness testified that a day or two before the fire she loaned accused coal oil, an objection to a question on cross-examination, as to whether she had any vinegar in the house, was properly sustained, though accused could show, on cross-examination, that the witness was mistaken in loaning coal oil instead of vinegar.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 931-948; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Robert F. White was convicted of arson, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, Roland G. Swaffield, and John G. Munholland, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of arson. He appeals from the judgment and an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant's chief contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. That the fire was of incendiary origin is not controverted. The evidence connecting defendant with the crime is almost wholly of a circumstantial nature. It tends to establish the following facts: That in September preceding the fire, which occurred on the night of November 30, 1911, defendant, by an assignment, acquired the lease of certain premises conducted as an apartment and lodging house, for which he agreed to pay $60 per month; that he bought from the prior occupant thereof the furniture contained therein, the market value of which was $275; that on October 19th he took out a fire insurance policy on the furniture for $1,000, and on November 15th caused another policy thereon to be issued in the sum of $500; that on the night of the fire the apartment in which it was started by breaking a hole in the plaster and inserting paper saturated with coal oil was unoccupied; that the prior occupant thereof had rented it for seven months from October 1st at $27.50 per month, but at the repeated request of defendant surrendered possession thereof to defendant on November 28th; that defendant claimed that he had rented the apartment to a man named Collins at $50 per month; that Collins paid one month's rent in advance, but never took possession of the house, nor called for a return of the payment; that defendant never saw Collins after he made the payment. These and numerous other circumstances, among them being the conflicting stories concerning his transaction with Collins, the fact that the business was not profitable, and that defendant, a day or two before the fire, borrowed a cup of coal oil from a neighbor, all tended to establish facts from which the jury were justified in concluding that defendant committed the crime.

[2, 3] A dealer in both new and secondhand furniture, called as a witness on behalf of the people, after stating that he knew the fair cash market value of the property which defendant had in the apartment, was asked to state such value. Defendant's objection to this question, upon the ground that it was incompetent and irrelevant, was overruled. Appellant claims that the cross-examination of the witness showed that he was not sufficiently acquainted with the various articles of furniture to testify as to their value; and, further, that the question should have been directed to the value of the property as a whole installed as an equipment of the house. The limited examination of the property made by the witness, as shown by the cross-examination, and upon which he based his opinion, went to the weight rather than to the competency of his evidence. In the absence of evidence that the property possessed a different or special value by reason of being installed in the house, the market value thereof, in view of the insurance obtained thereon by defendant, was a circumstance which the jury was entitled to consider in reaching their verdict. We perceive no error in the action of the court in overruling the objection.

[4] Appellant also predicates error upon the giving of an instruction as follows: "To constitute a burning, it is not necessary that the building set on fire should have been destroyed. It is sufficient that fire is applied so as to take effect upon any part of the substance of the building." It is claimed that this instruction assumes a fact the existence of which was a question for the jury to determine. We do not think the instruction open to such contention; but, however that may be, since the evidence conclusively shows that the fire was of incendiary origin, which fact is conceded by appellant, no prejudice could result from the giving of the instruction. People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 97 Pac. 871.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[5] A neighbor of defendant, called as a witness, stated that a day or two before the fire she loaned defendant coal oil. On cross-examination she was asked, "Did you have any vinegar in the house?" to which an objection interposed by the people was sustained. While the defendant, on cross-examination, was entitled to show that the witness was mistaken in loaning coal oil to defendant, and that instead of coal oil he obtained vinegar, it would by no means follow that because she had vinegar in the house she did not loan him coal oil as stated.

Other alleged errors are equally without merit as those to which we have adverted.

The record discloses no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; JAMES, J.

19 Cal. App. 559

WICKLAND v. WICKLAND (two cases).
(Civ. 1,172, 1,173.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 25, 1912. Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1912; Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 23, 1912.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—MISCONDUCT OF HUSBAND.

Where a husband threatened to kill his wife, and without reason accused her of infidelity and thereby inflicted on her grievous mental suffering, and by fraud and duress induced her to convey to him her separate property without any consideration, the court properly granted to her a divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-83; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 70*)—FRAUD—DURESS.

Where a wife was induced by fraud and threats to convey her separate property to her husband without consideration, and without anything to indicate any intention to change the separate character of the property, the court, at the suit of the wife, would set aside the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 165-182; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 59*)—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where it affirmatively appeared that there was nothing due a husband, obtaining by fraud and duress a conveyance of his wife's separate property, to place him in the condition in which he was at the time of the execution of the conveyance, and any money obtained and paid out by him was obtained by mortgages on the property, the amount of which mortgages was less than the value of the property, and no personal liability attached to the husband, save for a deficiency judgment, the court setting aside the conveyance did not abuse its discretion in refusing a compensatory order under Civ. Code, § 3408, authorizing the court on rescinding a contract to require the party to whom the relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice requires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 119-125; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 222*)—FEES FOR COUNSEL OF WIFE—ALLOWANCE IN JUDGMENT.

An allowance of fees for counsel of the wife suing for a divorce cannot be made in the judgment granting a divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 644; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

Actions by M. Blanche Wickland against John W. Wickland for a divorce and for the cancellation of a conveyance of her separate property. From judgments for plaintiff in each action, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Wilbur Bassett, of Los Angeles, for appellant. John M. York, and Hammack & Hammack, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. In both of these cases defendant appeals from the judgment rendered in plaintiff's favor, and from an order in each case denying a new trial. The first action was one for divorce and decree as to the separate character of certain property; the second was one to have such property standing in the name of defendant declared to be the separate property of plaintiff, and for the cancellation of a certain written agreement theretofore entered into between the parties with reference to a conveyance of said property. By stipulation, both of these appeals are to be heard and determined upon a single bill of exceptions.

[1, 2] The court in the divorce case found in favor of plaintiff, and found that defendant had threatened to kill plaintiff, had accused her of infidelity, which last accusation the court finds to have been without reason or cause, and that he had thereby inflicted upon plaintiff grievous mental suffering. The court further found that all of the property owned by both parties on the 24th day of March, 1910, was the sole and separate property of plaintiff; that on said date the defendant procured the signature of plaintiff to an agreement to convey all of this property to defendant, without any consideration and by duress and threats, and the court rendered its interlocutory decree granting plaintiff a divorce, with $100 attorney's fees, and finding that all of the property described in that certain agreement appearing in the bill of exceptions was the separate property of plaintiff, and that defendant had no interest therein. The second action was an independent action to cancel a certain agreement set forth in the complaint, in which certain real and personal property was described, and for a judgment declaring all of the property therein described to be the separate property of plaintiff. Upon a trial of the action, the court found that on the 24th day of March, 1910, defendant obtained plaintiff's signature to an agreement, which was of record, without consideration and by means of threats that, unless she would sign such agreement, defendant would defame her character. The court further found that all of said property was purchased with funds which were the separate property and estate of plaintiff, that defendant had no interest therein, and rendered judgment accordingly, canceling the deed and agreement.

There is evidence in the bill of exceptions tending to establish the following facts: That plaintiff and defendant intermarried in 1894; that seven children had been born of the marriage, three of whom were living; that all of the property possessed by the parties was the fruits of certain moneys inherited by plaintiff from her father's estate; that these moneys were employed in the purchase of certain real property described in the agreement and deed; that a portion, if not all, of this property was mortgaged, the mortgages, however, being for far less than the real value of the property; that defendant became jealous of plaintiff, accused her of infidelity, made threats against her, refused to contribute anything to her support, and demanded that the ranch property be put in his name for business reasons; that plaintiff was sick, and defendant promised that if she would sign the agreement he would execute an instrument exonerating her from all charges of infidelity; that she signed the agreement, conveyed the property to him, and he thereafter placed mortgages upon the property, part of which money was paid over to plaintiff and used by her in support and maintenance and for other legitimate purposes. Defendant had no interest in any of the property in controversy, except such as he acquired by plaintiff's conveyance, and there is evidence tending to show that this was never intended to be other than placing the same in his name for business reasons, upon the theory that he could better borrow money than plaintiff could; but nothing would indicate any intention to change the separate character of the property, unless it be certain expressions in the agreement, which agreement the court finds to have been procured by fraud and duress.

[3, 4] There is ample evidence in the record justifying every finding made by the court and establishing the righteousness of the judgment in both cases. There was no error in the court failing to make an order with reference to compensation, as authorized by section 3408 of the Civil Code, for the reason that it affirmatively appears that there was nothing due him to place him in the condition in which he was at the time of the execution of the instruments. Any money obtained by him and paid out by him was obtained by mortgages upon the property, the amount of which mortgages was less than its value, and which property belonged to plaintiff and not to defendant; and no personal liability attached to him, save for a deficiency judgment, a remote possibility of which is not suggested by the record. We see no abuse of discretion in the action of the court in refusing a compensatory order. The allowance for attorney's fees was unauthorized. Lacey v. Lacey, 108 Cal. 45, 40 Pac. 1056.

We find no error in the record, and see no merit in either appeal, except as to the allowance of attorney's fees. The judgment in No. 1,172 is modified by striking therefrom the allowance of $100 attorney's fees. In all other respects the judgment and order in both cases are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 552

Ex parte NAKANISHI. (Cr. 258.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 24, 1912.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 30*)—POLICE COURTS—IMPRISONMENT—AUTHORITY OF OFFICER—COPY OF JUDGMENT—TIME.

Penal Code, § 1455, relating to proceedings in justice and police courts, provides that when a judgment of imprisonment is entered a certified copy must be delivered to the sheriff, marshal, or other officer, which is a sufficient warrant for its execution. Held that, where a judgment of imprisonment for a misdemeanor was duly entered against defendant in a police court where he was tried, it was sufficient to justify his imprisonment; the time of the delivery of a certified copy to the officer being immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 259*)—IMPRISONMENT—JUDGMENT—CERTIFIED COPY.

St. 1901, p. 95, amended by St. 1907, p. 136, provides for a clerk in police courts in cities, who is required to keep a record of the proceedings and to issue all processes. It also declares that certified transcripts of the dockets or files of the court, certified by the clerk under the seal of the court, shall be evidence in any court of the state of the contents of such docket or files. Held that, under Penal Code, § 1455, providing that when a judgment of a police court directs the imprisonment of a person convicted of an offense a certified copy shall be delivered to the officer, and shall be a warrant for its execution, it is the duty of the clerk of a police court, when judgment of imprisonment has been regularly entered, unless directed by the police justice to the contrary, to forthwith make a certified copy and deliver the same to the proper officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 562-566; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

Application of M. Nakanishi for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged. Petitioner remanded.

Chas. S. McKelvey and W. H. Stevens, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Guy Eddie, of Los Angeles, City Prosecutor, and Frank W. Stafford, of Los Angeles, Deputy City Prosecutor, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Petitioner by this proceeding seeks to secure his discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the City of Los Angeles. In his petition for the writ issued herein, he set out as ground therefor that no warrant or commitment of any kind had been issued to the chief of police directing his imprisonment, and that he was not held on any warrant of arrest, nor upon suspicion of having committed any public offense. The chief of police made return to the writ, showing that on the 19th day of June, 1912, in the police court of the city of Los Angeles, petitioner was adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and ordered to be imprisoned in the city jail of said city for the term of 180 days. The return then recites as follows: "That at said time a representative of your petitioner was present in said court; and under the said order so made, and authority of the judgment entered by the said court, your respondent took the body of the petitioner and imprisoned him under the judgment and order of said court. A copy of which said judgment is hereto annexed." Attached to the return, and over the certificate of the clerk of the police court and the seal of said court, is a copy of the docket record made in the case in which petitioner was charged with the crime of vagrancy. This record recites that petitioner pleaded guilty to the offense charged and waived time for sentence; "whereupon it was ordered and adjudged by the court, this 19th day of June, 1912, that for said offense the said M. Nakanishi be imprisoned in the city jail of Los Angeles city for the term of 180 days, and that said defendant be discharged at the expiration of said term. H. H. Rose, Police Judge."

[1] Section 1455 of the Penal Code, referring to proceedings in justice and police courts, provides as follows: "When a judgment of imprisonment is entered, a certified copy thereof must be delivered to the sheriff, marshal, or other officer, which is a sufficient warrant for its execution." It appears by the return of the chief of police that a judgment has been regularly entered, directing the imprisonment of the petitioner in the city jail, and respondent exhibits in this court a certified copy of the complete record, including the judgment. If this judgment, as here exhibited, is sufficient as to its certification to satisfy the requirement of section 1455 of the Penal Code, above cited, then the petitioner must be remanded, because the officer has received from the court sufficient authority, evidenced in writing, to justify the detention of petitioner. It matters not when this certified record, or certified copy of the judgment, was delivered to him; for, it having been made to appear that a valid judgment was entered against petitioner, in order to authorize his imprisonment thereunder, it was only necessary for the officer to possess duly authenticated evidence of the existence of the judgment.

[2] The certified copy of the record and judgment of the police court is made by the clerk of said court; and we are satisfied that it is regular in form and altogether sufficient. The act of the Legislature providing for police courts in cities of the first and one-half class, and for officers thereof, makes provision for a clerk to serve in each department of that court, and provides that said clerks "shall keep a record of the proceedings of, and issue all processes ordered by, the city justices, or either of them, or by said police court; * * *" and further provides that "certified transcripts of the dockets or files of said court, certified by the clerk of said court under the seal of said court, shall be evidence in any court of this state of the contents of said docket or of said files, as the case may be." Stats. 1901, p. 95, Amended by Stats. 1907, p. 136. Under the provisions of the act of the Legislature referred to, the clerk of the police court, in our opinion, has authority to make a certified copy of the judgment of said court and deliver it to the officer whose duty it is to take the custody of a defendant ordered to be imprisoned. And, in our opinion, it became the clerk's duty, when a judgment of imprisonment was regularly entered, unless otherwise directed by the police judge (and no such direction appears in this record), to forthwith make a certified copy of the judgment and deliver it to the proper officer. Such a certified copy of the judgment of imprisonment entered against the petitioner herein has been made, and has been delivered to respondent, the chief of police. These facts appearing, the contention made by petitioner that he is illegally detained is completely answered.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 529

PROULX et al. v. SACRAMENTO VALLEY LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 1,013.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 22, 1912.)

1. BROKERS (§ 43*)—EMPLOYMENT TO SELL LAND—WRITING—PAROL EVIDENCE.

It being necessary, under Civ. Code, § 1624, declaring invalid a contract of employment to sell land, unless it be in writing, that it contain a description of the land, and parol evidence, while admissible to cure such a description therein, not being admissible to create a description not existing in it, and it being manifest, construing as a whole the letters claimed to constitute such a hiring, that they referred only to sales of the "G" tract, parol evidence that the employers, when using in one of the letters the phrase "a fair commission for the sale of lands which we will now take up vigorously," had in mind and intended to describe and designate the "P" tract is not admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 43*) — EMPLOYMENT TO SELL LAND—INVALID CONTRACT—RECOVERY ON QUANTUM MERUIT.

A contract of employment to sell real estate being declared by Civ. Code, § 1624, invalid, unless in writing, recovery on quantum meruit of the reasonable value of services in making such a sale cannot be had, in the absence of such a valid contract of employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Isidore J. Proulx and another, partners as Elbe & Proulx, against the Sacramento Valley Land Company and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Ben F. Geis, of Willows, and Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for appellants. Frank H. Gould, of San Francisco, and Frank Freeman and Charles L. Donohue, both of Willows, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action for the recovery of a realty brokers' commission, alleged to be due under a contract whereby the plaintiffs were employed to assist in the sale of certain real estate. The case, which was tried with a jury, resulted in a judgment of nonsuit, from which the appeal is taken.

Plaintiffs' complaint, in substance, alleges that the defendants were the owners of or had options upon certain several and separate parcels of agricultural land situate in Glenn and Colusa counties, in the state of California, known as "Glenn Rancho Lands," "Packer Tract," and "Boggs Ranch Lands"; that the plaintiffs and defendants entered into a contract by the terms of which the plaintiffs, as copartners, were employed to assist in the sale of the designated lands for the agreed compensation of 2½ per cent. of all sums for which said lands, or any part thereof, might be sold with the assistance of the plaintiffs; that in accordance with such agreement the plaintiffs proceeded to and did assist the defendants in the sale of 2,000 acres of the lands mentioned at the price of $62.57 per acre, or in all the sum of $125,140; that there is due to the plaintiffs, under the terms of the contract, the sum of $3,128.50 as commissions, which the defendants refuse to pay.

The defendant the Sacramento Valley Land Company by its separate answer admitted the ownership of the lands described in the plaintiffs' complaint, but denied that there was any employment of plaintiffs to sell said lands, or that they had sold or assisted in the sale of the same.

The defendants C. M. Wooster Company and C. M. Wooster, answering for themselves denied that they owned any of the lands described in the complaint, and, while denying the execution of the precise contract pleaded admitted that they had agreed with the plaintiffs to pay them 2½ per cent. on any lands that the plaintiffs would sell for the C. M. Wooster Company, as the agent of the Sacramento Valley Land Company, which formed a part of and were included within the tract of land owned by the Sacramento Valley Land Company in Glenn county, known as "the Glenn Tract of the Sacramento Valley Land Co." The Wooster defendants denied, however that the plaintiffs, in accordance with the admitted agreement or otherwise, sold or assisted in the sale of any lands in the Glenn Rancho tract, or any other of the lands belonging to the Sacramento Valley Land Company.

It was admitted upon the trial of the case that the defendant C. M. Wooster Company was the authorized agent of the Sacramento Valley Land Company for the sale of its lands, and as such agent was duly authorized to and did contract in writing with the plaintiffs for the sale of lands in the tract of land belonging to the Sacramento Valley Land Company known and designated as the "Glenn Rancho Lands." This tract of land, however, is located exclusively in Glenn county, and is a piece or parcel of land entirely separate and distinct from the tract of land known as the "Packer Tract"; and no claim is made in this action that there is anything due to the plaintiffs from the defendants for or on account of any sale of land lying within the tract known as the "Glenn Rancho Lands."

There was some evidence offered and received at the trial in support of plaintiffs' case which tended to show that through the efforts of the plaintiffs one S. W. Funk, as the representative of the "Church of the Brethren, commonly known as the Dunkers," was induced to and did enter into a contract with the Sacramento Valley Land Company for the purchase of 2,000 acres, at the price of $62.57 per acre, of the lands known as the "Packer Tract," one portion of which tract was located in Glenn county, and the other in Colusa county. It was for the sale of these lands that commissions are claimed and sued for in this case by the plaintiffs.

The trial court granted the nonsuit upon the sole ground that the evidence adduced in support of the plaintiffs' case did not show the execution of a written contract, as required by section 1624 of the Civil Code, between the plaintiffs and the defendants for the sale of the 2,000 acres in the Packer tract, which, it is claimed, the evidence shows was brought about by the efforts of the plaintiffs.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The plaintiffs, in order to show the making and executing of a contract with the defendant Wooster Company for the sale of lands in the Packer tract introduced in evidence and relied largely, if not entirely, upon certain written correspondence which passed between plaintiffs and the Wooster Company, as agent of the Sacramento Valley Land Company.

Numerous letters, some of which were admitted in evidence and others rejected, were shown to have passed between the parties at different times; but the letter of January 18, 1905, from the Wooster Company to plaintiffs was the only one wherein the subject of employment and compensation is mentioned. This letter, it appears, was written in response to a written request made upon the Wooster Company for the payment of commissions claimed to be due the plaintiffs for past services rendered in inducing sales and procuring purchasers of lands lying in the Glenn Rancho tract. No reference was made, directly or indirectly, in the letter to the Packer tract; but after a general discussion of an apparent misunderstanding between the plaintiffs and the Wooster Company as to the exact amount of commissions previously agreed to be paid to plaintiffs for past services in inducing sales in the Glenn Rancho tract, the writer stated, in substance, that in his opinion it was but fair and right that the plaintiffs, for such sales as they had already made, should be paid a commission of 5 per cent., and then proceeded to say that "a fair commission agreement for the sale of lands which we will now take up vigorously, same as we have the Boggs ranch, is that sales made by you [the plaintiffs] to your own customers, that you get 5 per cent.; and when you sell to customers that we send to you, or any agents whom we have to pay, that the commission be 2½ per cent."

In reply to this letter, the plaintiffs wrote as follows: "We have carefully considered your proposition of the 18th inst. about our commissions in future and so that there will be no misunderstanding hereafter we have consented to accept your proposition of 5 per cent. and 2½ per cent. commission. There is considerable inquiry now for lands here and your land will sell readily. We will do our best for you in every instance."

Notwithstanding that neither of these letters made any reference to the Packer tract, it is claimed that the correspondence between the parties constituted a memorandum of plaintiffs' alleged contract with the Wooster Company for the sale of lands in the Packer tract sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds.

Plaintiffs concede, as, of course, they must, that a contract of employment for the sale of real estate, to be valid, must be expressed in writing; but they insist, as we understand them, that the only essential of such a contract, aside from its formal parts, which need necessarily be expressed in writing, is the fact of employment generally for the purpose of selling real estate, and that no particular piece or parcel of land to be sold need be specifically designated or described, if the subject-matter of the contract can be ascertained by a resort to parol evidence.

[1] From this it is, in effect, argued that the clause contained in the Wooster Company letter of January 18, 1905, fixing "a fair commission for the sale of lands which we will now take up vigorously," coupled with the plaintiffs' letter of acceptance, constituted a complete and enforceable contract for the employment of the plaintiffs in the sale of any and all lands belonging to the Sacramento Valley Land Company, including the Packer tract; and that therefore the plaintiffs should have been permitted to show by parol evidence that at the time of the making of the contract the parties thereto had in mind and contemplated the sale of lands in the Packer tract.

This contention is untenable. Contracts authorizing or employing an agent or broker to sell real estate for a commission must not only be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged (Civ. Code, § 1624), but they must also contain a description of the property to be sold, sufficient in itself, or by reference, to identify the same without the aid of parol evidence. Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 105, 69 Pac. 853. While it is true generally that a contract to employ a broker to sell real estate will not be declared void merely because of a defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity in the description of the property to be sold when such defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity can be cured by the allegation and proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances (Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 Pac. 962), nevertheless parol evidence cannot be resorted to for the purpose of creating a description which does not exist in the contract itself. In short, a description of land sought to be sold under a broker's contract can be cured, but not created, by parol evidence. Mendenhall v. Rose (Cal.) 33 Pac. 884; Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 Pac. 386; Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 105, 69 Pac. 853.

An apt illustration and application of the rule in this behalf is to be found in Marriner v. Dennison, supra, where it is said: "Parol evidence cannot be heard to furnish a description. The only purpose for which such evidence can be heard is to apply the description given to the subject-matter. Thus, if the description were 'my' farm in Los Angeles county, an allegation in the complaint that I owned but one farm in said county, and where it was situated, would apply the description to the proper subject-matter, and render it certain. But if the description were 'a' farm in Los Angeles county, it could not be rendered certain by the allegation of such extrinsic matter."

It will thus be seen that even if it be conceded that the two letters immediately under discussion may be considered and construed as a completed contract, in so far as the mere matter of the employment of the plaintiffs is concerned, nevertheless such contract was fatally defective in not describing, or at least in not attempting to describe, the particular lands which it is claimed the parties intended to be the subject-matter of the contract. It is but grasping at a straw to say, as do the plaintiffs, that the single sentence in the Wooster Company letter, which refers to "the sale of lands which we will now take up vigorously," should be isolated from its context, and that when so isolated and read in conjunction with the plaintiffs' letter it must be construed as an accepted offer to employ the plaintiffs in making sales of any and all lands, including the Packer tract, then owned by the Sacramento Valley Land Company.

The letters in question must be read and construed as a whole, and when so read and construed it is manifest that they had reference only to past and possible future sales of land in the Glenn Rancho tract; and therefore the contract, if any, arising therefrom must be limited in its scope and effect to such sales of land as were made from the Glenn Rancho tract.

In any event, it is certain that the letters here relied upon to constitute a completed contract of employment for the sale of lands in the Packer tract do not contain a reference to that tract, or attempt to designate and describe, as the subject-matter of a contract, any other lands belonging to the Sacramento Valley Land Company. As a consequence, those letters cannot be held to constitute such a contract as will satisfy the statute of frauds.

It follows from what has been said that the trial court did not err in refusing plaintiffs permission to show by parol evidence that when the Wooster Company employed the phrase "a fair commission for the sale of lands which we will not take up vigorously" they had in mind and intended to describe and designate the Packer tract.

The trial court did not err in refusing to admit in evidence the several supplementary letters between the plaintiffs and the Wooster Company, which were offered to support the claim that the letter of January 18, 1905, referred to and was intended to describe the Packer tract. None of these letters, singly or all together, or when read in connection with the initial letters of the parties, indicated or tended to make a written contract of employment to sell the Packer tract of land; and therefore they were rightly rejected.

[2] The conclusion which we have reached as to the principal point in the case necessarily disposes of the discussion found in the briefs of the parties as to whether or not, assuming the existence of a valid contract, the plaintiffs earned the commission sued for. Incidentally it may be stated that the second count of the plaintiffs' complaint is founded upon quantum meruit; but, as there was no valid contract of employment in writing, it is clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services, and this phase of the case need not be further discussed or considered. McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299; Myres v. Surryhne, 67 Cal. 657, 8 Pac. 523; McGeary v. Satchwell, 129 Cal. 389, 62 Pac. 58; McPail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266.

It seems clear to us upon the whole case that none of the evidence, admitted or rejected, which was offered in support of the plaintiffs' pleaded cause of action was sufficient to show a valid contract of employment for the sale of lands in the Packer tract, and this being so the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

(19 Cal. App. 513)

KNIGHT v. BLACK et al. (Civ. 1,010.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 22, 1912. Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1912; Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 20, 1912.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 290*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER — RIGHT TO HAVE FOR BREACH OF COLLATERAL COVENANT.

An action in unlawful detainer will lie for a breach of collateral covenants, as well as for a breach of those which run with the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1216; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 44*)—CONTRACT —"CONDITION"—"COVENANT" — CONSTRUCTION OF LEASE.

An agreement in a lease to give a chattel mortgage on personalty as security for future payments of rent is a "condition," which as a mutual agreement is binding on both parties, and a breach of which will work a forfeiture of the estate, rather than a "covenant," which binds only the covenantor, and whose breach only warrants the recovery of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-110; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1394-1400, 1691-1693.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 44*)—CONSTRUCTION OF LEASE — CONDITIONS AND COVENANTS.

Conditions in a contract of lease will be construed as covenants to avoid a forfeiture, when it can be reasonably done; but such a construction will never be indulged in, contrary to the clear intent of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-110; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 103*)—FORFEITURE OF LEASE—PROVISION OF SECURITY—SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 3275, which provides for relief from a forfeiture upon the making of full compensation, except where the party has been guilty of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty, no forfeiture of a lease may be had for the lessee's failure to comply with a provision which required the securing of future payments of rent by the execution of a chattel mortgage, where he was in good faith endeavoring to substantially perform, and offered to make a deposit of gold coin sufficient to secure, to execute a promissory note secured by a mortgage on realty, or to deliver such realty in trust, as security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 321-327, 337-342; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 290*)—NATURE OF REMEDY—RIGHT TO COUNTERCLAIM—"UNLAWFUL DETAINER."

As "unlawful detainer" is a summary remedy for the restitution of the possession of premises withheld by a tenant in violation of the covenants of his lease, and would be rendered inadequate by the interposition of the defenses usually permitted in cases at law, a defendant could not have a counterclaim or cross-action for damages for a constructive eviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207-1216; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 7189.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—DETERMINING UNNECESSARY QUESTIONS.

The court, on review, will not determine the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, in so far as it relates to the damages awarded, where the judgment must be reversed because of the error of the trial court in striking out an equitable defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331-3342; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Unlawful detainer by Robert S. Knight against Henry Black and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, Henry Black appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Arthur H. Barendt, of San Francisco (Maurice Gradwohl, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Knight, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Respondent had judgment in the lower court as the plaintiff in an action in unlawful detainer. The defendant Henry Black has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying him a new trial. The points presented upon the appeal relate mainly to the overruling of the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, the sustaining of the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendants' cross-complaint, and the granting of plaintiff's motion to strike out parts of the defendants' answer.

The plaintiff's cause of action is founded substantially upon the following facts: On November 23, 1908, plaintiff leased to the defendant certain premises in the city and county of San Francisco for a period of 10 years from and after the completion of a building which plaintiff agreed to erect upon the premises. The building was completed on the 25th day of June, 1909, whereupon defendant went into possession under the terms of the lease. The lease contained some 16 covenants. Of these an alleged breach of the fourteenth, taken in connection with the sixteenth, was the basis of the plaintiff's cause of action. The fourteenth covenant of the lease reads as follows: "Fourteenth. It is further understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the lessee shall, immediately upon completion of the building, furnish the same with suitable furniture, bedding, and carpets that shall have a cash value of not less than three thousand ($3,000) dollars, and shall be owned by the said lessee free from all liens and incumbrances, and upon the completion of said furnishing, and within thirty (30) days after the completion of the demised premises, the said lessee shall execute to the said lessor a note and first chattel mortgage on all said furniture, bedding, and carpets for the full sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, to secure to said lessor the payment of all rents or other claims arising in favor of said lessor under this lease and during the entire term of same, which chattel mortgage shall be in legal form and shall contain an express covenant that none of said furniture, bedding, and carpets shall be removed from said premises during the continuance of this lease, and that the said lessee shall at all times keep the same in good order, repair, and condition." The sixteenth covenant of the lease reads as follows: "Sixteenth. It is further understood and agreed that all the covenants and agreements of the said lessee herein contained are conditions, and that in default of the lessee fulfilling any of same the said lessor may at any time thereafter at his option forfeit this lease, and that in that event any holding thereafter of the said lessee shall be construed to be a tenancy from month to month only, for the same rental payable in the same manner as hereinbefore stated." The plaintiff on August 25, 1909, gave the defendant three days' notice in writing in the alternative form, as required by subdivision 3 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but the defendant failed either to perform the covenant or to deliver up the possession of the property.

[1] In support of his demurrer, it is the defendant's contention that a covenant to give security for the payment of rent is collateral to the lease it accompanies, and does not run with the land, and that an action in unlawful detainer will not lie for a breach of any covenant which does not come within the technical definition of "covenants running with the land." No authority from this state has been cited to us by the defendant in support of his attempted limitation of the scope and effect of the Code section under consideration, and we shall not attempt to follow counsel for the defendant in his discussion of the legal niceties and refinements which distinguish "covenants running with the land" from those that do not, but will content ourselves with saying that to hold as he contends would not only be a manifest violation of the plain purpose of the unlawful detainer act of this state, but would not accord with the views of our Supreme Court as expressed in several actions of unlawful detainer, which were sustained solely because of breaches of purely collateral covenants. Thus in the case of Silva v. Campbell, 84 Cal. 420, 24 Pac. 316, it was said, in effect, that upon the giving of the three days' notice required by subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the summary process provided by that section will lie for a failure to perform any condition or covenant of the lease or agreement under which the property is held. In the case of Kelly v. Teague, 63 Cal. 68, it was expressly held in construing a statute substantially, if not entirely similar to our present unlawful detainer act, that "the right of action by a landlord against a tenant accrues upon the latter continuing in possession of the demised premises in person or by his subtenant for a neglect or failure to perform any condition or covenant of the lease." To the same effect is the decision in the case of Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449, which involved the violation of a covenant to manufacture wine upon the demised premises from grapes raised upon the adjoining ranch of the lessor.

[2] The agreement in the present case to provide security for the payment of the rent stipulated in the lease is a condition, and not a covenant. There is a decided distinction between the creation and effect of a condition and a covenant. A condition is a qualification annexed to an estate by the grantor, upon the happening of which the estate granted is enlarged or defeated; and it differs from a covenant in this: That it is created by the mutual agreement of the parties, and is binding upon both, whereas a covenant is an agreement of the covenantor only. A breach of a condition upon which an estate is granted works a forfeiture of the estate, while a breach of a covenant is merely ground for the recovery of damages. Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 82 N. W. 1003; Langley v. Ross, 55 Mich. 163, 20 N. W. 886. Ordinarily, in order to avoid a forfeiture, conditions in a conveyance will be construed as covenants when this can be reasonably done; but a covenant, instead of a condition, will never be implied contrary to the clear intent of the parties. Although designated in the lease as a covenant, the agreement in the present case to give security for the payment of rent must, in accordance with the express intention of the parties, be construed and considered as a condition, rather than a covenant (Kew v. Trainor, 150 Ill. 150, 37 N. E. 223), and as the language of the statute plainly includes and applies to any and every condition embodied in a lease, the question as to what is or what is not "a covenant" running with the land is not involved in the case at bar and need not now be considered. The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

[3] The defendant by his answer admitted his failure, as charged in the plaintiff's complaint, to comply with the condition of the lease relating to security for the payment of the rent, but set up by way of an equitable defense facts which, if true, tend to show that, by reason of circumstances over which the defendant had no control, literal compliance with the condition was temporarily impossible. In addition, the defendant, upon this phase of the case, pleaded in his answer a tender to plaintiff of other security substantially the same to all intents and purposes as that called for in the lease, and which would have been amply sufficient, if accepted, to protect the plaintiff against any possible loss for nonpayment of rent until such time as the defendant could furnish the identical security called for by the condition of the lease.

In this behalf the defendant's answer in part alleges: "That defendant, by and with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, entered into a contract, on or about the 12th day of July, 1909, for a lease of the premises described in plaintiff's complaint with one Ida Quinn, codefendant herein. That pursuant to said contract said Ida Quinn entered into possession and occupation of said premises on or about the 12th day of July, 1909, and ever since has been and now is in the actual possession and occupation thereof; that immediately thereupon said Ida Quinn purchased carpets and furniture of a cash value of forty-five hundred ($4,500) dollars, or thereabouts, and installed all of said carpets and furniture in said premises; and it was then and there mutually agreed by and between plaintiff and this defendant that the latter should assign to plaintiff the promissory note and chattel mortgage on said furniture and carpets given to secure said note, which the said Ida Quinn had agreed to execute in favor of defendant, and plaintiff agreed to accept the assignment of said note and mortgage in lieu of the note and mortgage as provided in the lease of said premises from plaintiff to defendant in paragraph I of this answer referred to, and the said Ida Quinn promised to execute said note and chattel mortgage in favor of this defendant, as more fully appears by the said contract of lease with her, copy of which is attached to this amended answer, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part hereof; that ever since the said 12th day of July, 1909, this defendant has made repeated demands upon said Ida Quinn to carry out the terms of said contract of lease, and to execute the promissory note and chattel mortgage in favor of this defendant as therein provided; but said Ida Quinn has willfully and persistently refused to perform any of the terms and conditions of said lease, and has persistently refused, though having the ability so to do, to execute in favor of this defendant the said promissory note and chattel mortgage on the carpets and furniture installed by her in said premises and hereinbefore referred to; that defendant has been obliged to commence and did commence, and there is now pending in the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, an action in unlawful detainer, in which this defendant is plaintiff and the said Ida Quinn is defendant, and said action is numbered 27,084; that the object of said action is to recover from her the possession of said premises, so that this defendant may, immediately upon his re-entry into the possession of said premises, fulfill literally the terms of the covenant referred to in plaintiff's complaint; that pending the recovery of judgment in said action against said Ida Quinn, and for the purpose of protecting plaintiff from loss by reason of the nonfulfillment of the covenant last herein mentioned and compensating him, this defendant heretofore, to wit, on or about the 28th day of August, 1909, that is to say, within three (3) days after the service on him of the notice in paragraph V of plaintiff's complaint mentioned (a copy of which, marked 'Exhibit B,' is attached to said complaint), made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff a promissory note in the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, secured by a duly executed and acknowledged first mortgage on real estate of a reasonable value in excess of $6,000, lying, being, and situate in the said city and county of San Francisco, and this defendant then and there offered, if said security were not sufficient or in form agreeable to plaintiff, he would make any reasonable change or would execute in lieu thereof a deed of trust to said property, the condition of said trust being that, if this defendant failed to pay all rents or other claims arising in favor of the plaintiff under said lease, then the trustee in such deed named should convey to the plaintiff, cestui que trust in said deed named, the said property of the reasonable value of upwards of $6,000, hereinbefore referred to; that thereafter, plaintiff having refused to accept either said mortgage or said deed of trust, defendant offered, in lieu of the note and chattel mortgage in said lease prescribed, to deposit gold coin of the United States to the amount of $3,000 in any bank of the said city and county of San Francisco selected by plaintiff, there to remain as security for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, and defendant herein, hereby expressly tenders the sum of $3,000 gold coin of the United States to plaintiff as security for the performance of the covenant herein referred to, and alleges that he has been ever since the 28th day of August, 1909, ready, and now is ready, to make said deposit."

The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike out the essential parts of the quoted portion of the defendant's answer upon the theory, apparently, that a literal compliance with the condition of the lease, notwithstanding that its breach involved a forfeiture, was absolutely essential to the life of the lease and the estate granted thereunder, and that a substantial compliance with the condition could not be pleaded or considered as a valid defense to the action. This, we think, was error, which subsequently and necessarily resulted in prejudice to the defendant by the exclusion of proffered testimony which would have been material and relevant to the issue presented by this defense.

[4] By this action the plaintiff is seeking to have a forfeiture declared because of the alleged default in a condition of the lease, and although the remedy provided by law for the breach of such a condition is summary in principle and process, nevertheless the very nature of the action, involving, as it does, a forfeiture, appeals to the equity side of the court, and in turn requires "a full examination of all of the equities involved to the end that exact justice be done." Gray v. Maier, etc., Brewery, 2 Cal. App. 653, 84 Pac. 280. The law abhors a forfeiture, and therefore will ordinarily be satisfied with a substantial compliance of a condition involving a forfeiture, when its literal fulfillment is prevented by uncontrollable circumstances. Civ. Code, § 3275; Oil Creek Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Ry. Co., 57 Pa. 65; Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 3; Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 289, p. 355. Clearly the proffered substitution of gold coin equal in amount to the value of the furniture required to be installed by the condition of the lease would have been, not only a substantial compliance with the condition, but would have afforded plaintiff security for his rent equal to, if not greater than, that which would have resulted from a literal compliance with the condition as it was written. United States gold coin is not very likely to depreciate in value—at least not from ordinary wear and tear, as would the furniture of an apartment house, even though repaired and replenished from time to time.

Time evidently was not intended by the parties to be the essence of the obligation in suit, and, notwithstanding the delay in its literal performance, it is apparent that it was capable of exact and entire compensation. Defendant's offer of substantial performance presumably was made in good faith and apparently in such a manner as was most likely under the circumstances to benefit the plaintiff, and inasmuch as the defendant endeavored by every means within his power to give the exact security called for, and in addition offered, in apparent good faith, to protect the payment of the rent due or to become due under the lease, by giving security therefor equal to, if not better than, that originally contracted for, equity should not and will not permit a forfeiture. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, p. 569, § 491; Steele v. Branch, supra; Civ. Code, §§ 1492-1495.

The case of Lundin v. Schoeffel, 167 Mass. 465, 45 N. E. 933, is akin to and very nearly supposes the facts in the case at bar. There, as here, the lessee had failed to give security for the future payment of rent, and in that case the court said: "If the lessee's failure had been an omission to pay rent promptly as it became due, it is plain that a court of equity might relieve against a forfeiture on this ground, though the omission was even willful. But lessee's failure in this case was merely an omission to pay promptly something which was only useful to the lessor by way of security for the future payment of rent. It was not like a case where the omission caused a person injury or increased the risk to the lessors, as in the case of waste, nonrepair, or noninsurance. In such a case a court of equity is not required to refuse relief against a forfeiture, but may look into the circumstances and determine whether, on the whole, it is just and right that such relief should be granted." The reasoning of this case applies with equal force and aptness to the facts pleaded by way of an equitable defense in the present case, and it is in line generally with the weight of authority bearing upon the subject under discussion.

[5] The defendant by way of cross-complaint sought to recover damages against the plaintiff for an alleged constructive eviction. The trial court sustained plaintiff's demurrer thereto upon the theory that a counterclaim or cross-complaint was not permissible in an action in unlawful detainer. This demurrer, we think, was properly sustained. It is the law in this state, and also in other jurisdictions where unlawful detainer statutes are in terms or essentially similar to our own, that a counterclaim or cross-complaint of any kind or character is neither proper nor permissible in actions in unlawful detainer. Warburton v. Doble, 38 Cal. 619; Kelly v. Teague, supra; Moroney v. Hellings, 110 Cal. 219, 42 Pac. 560; Ralph v. Lomer, 3 Wash. 401, 28 Pac. 760; Phillips v. Lodge, 8 Wash. 529, 36 Pac. 476; Owens v. Swanton, 25 Wash. 112, 64 Pac. 921; Pe- terson v. Kreuger, 67 Minn. 449, 70 N. W. 567; Abrams v. Watson, 59 Ala. 524; McSloy v. Ryan, 27 Mich. 110; Borden v. Sackett, 113 Mass. 214. The California cases here cited upon the subject of a counterclaim or cross-complaint in unlawful detainer actions in each instance rest the decision upon the mere statement of the rule in this behalf, without pretending to give the reason for its creation and application. The reason, however, is obviously to be found in the fact that the unlawful detainer act was intended to provide a summary remedy for the restitution of the possession of premises withheld by tenants in violation of the covenants of their lease, which remedy would be frustrated and rendered wholly inadequate by the interposition of the defenses usually permitted in ordinary cases at law. Phillips v. Lodge, supra.

[6] It follows from what has been said that the trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the cross-complaint, or in refusing to permit the introduction of testimony to support the allegations of the same. Inasmuch as the judgment must be reversed and the cause sent back for a new trial, because of the error of the trial court in striking out the equitable defense pleaded by the answer of the defendant, it is neither necessary nor proper for us to review the evidence and express an opinion as to its sufficiency to support the judgment in so far as it relates to the damages awarded to the plaintiff. The rulings of the trial court rejecting evidence bearing upon the issue of the defendant's offer of a substantial compliance with the condition of the lease are complained of; but as they were made and based upon the erroneous assumption that such a defense could not be properly pleaded and proven, what we have said with reference to the order of the court striking out parts of the defendant's answer applies with equal force to the rulings complained of, and doubtless they will not be repeated upon another trial, with the pleadings restored to their normal condition.

For the reasons stated, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court for a new trial.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

19 Cal. App. 414

PEOPLE v. CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT
& TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 995.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 12, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*)—SUBSCRIPTIONS OBTAINED BY FRAUD—STOCKHOLDERS' REMEDIES.

A person induced to purchase stock from a corporation by fraud is not prevented from rescinding the contract by the subsequent insolvency of the corporation and the appointment of a receiver, where creditors have not given credit to the corporation on the faith of that sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-265; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*)—SUBSCRIPTIONS OBTAINED BY FRAUD—STOCKHOLDERS' REMEDIES.

If a person, induced to subscribe for corporate stock by fraud, neglects for an unreasonable time after the discovery of the fraud to have the subscription canceled, and in the meantime the interests of third parties become involved which would be injured by the cancellation, the cancellation will be denied for laches, especially in view of Civ. Code, § 1691, providing that a person desiring the rescission of a contract must rescind promptly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-265; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 270*)—RESCISSION—LACHES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether a party seeking a rescission of a contract acted promptly is a matter of fact to be determined by the proof, unless the pleadings on their face show laches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1189, 1200; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*)—SUBSCRIPTIONS OBTAINED BY FRAUD—STOCKHOLDERS' REMEDIES.

A complaint, in an action for a rescission of a contract for the purchase of corporate stock for fraud, alleging the purchaser's ignorance of the insolvency of the corporation, and that its officers repeatedly represented it to be in a flourishing condition, does not show such laches as will defeat a rescission, although it shows that 16 months intervened between the purchase and the adjudication that the corporation was insolvent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-265; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 80*)—SUBSCRIPTIONS OBTAINED BY FRAUD—STOCKHOLDERS' REMEDIES.

The date from which laches begins to run against the right of a subscriber for corporate stock to rescind for fraud is the time when he first learns of the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-265; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the People, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, against the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, in which O. M. Goldaracena filed a petition of intervention. From a judgment dismissing the petition, the petitioner appeals. Reversed.

For decision of the Supreme Court denying transfer of the cause, see 126 Pac. 520.

William M. Cannon, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. V. De Laveaga, of San Francisco (E. De Los Magee, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment on demurrer denying appellant's petition of intervention by which he sought to have the receiver in the above-entitled action decreed to hold the sum of $12,000 in trust for him, and that the receiver is required to pay him that amount. The petition sets forth the fact of the insolvency of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, the appointment of E. J. Le Breton as receiver, and his possession of its assets, and as a cause of action recites that petitioner on the 20th day of September, 1906, was asked, through the officers and agents of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, to purchase from said corporation 100 shares of its capital stock, and that said agents and officers then and there made statements to the petitioner concerning such stock, which statements and representations were knowingly false and untrue and were made for the purpose and with the intent of deceiving, defrauding, and tricking the petitioner into subscribing for and purchasing the said capital stock, and the petitioner relied upon the said statements and representations, and, believing the same to be true, was thereby induced to and did purchase the said 100 shares of said capital stock and paid therefor the sum of $12,000, in full reliance upon said statements and representations; that at said time the bank was insolvent. The petition further sets forth that petitioner did not know at the time of said purchase that the said bank was insolvent or that said statements and representations were untrue, and did not learn of the insolvent condition of said bank nor of the falsity of said statements and representations until said bank was adjudged to be insolvent on or about the 14th day of January, 1908, and then alleges that petitioner was unable to ascertain such condition at an earlier date. The petition also recites a rescission of the fraudulent transaction on the 5th day of February, 1908, the deposit of the purchase price of $12,000 in the vaults of said defendant corporation, and that that sum was in the possession and under the control of the defendant and in its vaults continuously from the time of such payment until the assets of said corporation were taken charge of by its receiver under legal proceedings, and that the same can be traced and identified as the identical money of the petitioner. The demurrer of the receiver to the petition was sustained, the petition denied and dismissed, and from the judgment entered in pursuance of said order this appeal is prosecuted.

The proceeding therefore is in the usual form of a complaint predicated upon a rescission of a contract upon the ground of fraud. As hereinbefore stated, notice of rescission was given on the 5th day of February, 1908, and this action was commenced in April, 1908. It will thus be seen that the rescission was made and the action commenced subsequent to the adjudication of insolvency of the bank, which was on or about the 14th day of January, 1908.

The questions presented to us for determination by this appeal are: First, where there has been a fraudulent sale of stock by a corporation, may the subscriber have a rescission after the insolvency of the corporation? and, second, was the petitioner guilty of laches in giving his notice of rescission and in the bringing of this action?

In England the principle has become well established that, after the statutory proceedings for the winding up of a corporation have been commenced, a subscriber cannot rescind his subscription on account of fraud. He is too late. It matters not that he did not discover the fraud until after the proceedings for the winding up of the corporation had been commenced. The right of the corporate creditors prevails then over the equities of the subscriber. Cook on Corporations, § 162.

In this country this absolute rule does not obtain, and indeed there does not appear to be any fixed rule for claiming a rescission under this condition. While relief has been denied by the United States Supreme Court after proceedings in insolvency, the denial is not based upon the sole ground of the insolvency of the corporation. In one of the earlier cases on this subject the right to a rescission was denied upon the ground that the shareholder had been delinquent and had slept on his rights. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 55, 23 L. Ed. 203.

Some of the American text-writers have declared that corporate insolvency, as a rule, is a bar to such rescission. Cook on Corporations, § 164; 10 Cyc. 441. A close examination of the cases, however, upon which this statement of this principle is based, shows that the cases cited support no such proposition, and even those authors modify their declaration that subsequent insolvency is a bar to rescission, by the statement that there are strong American cases to the effect that the insolvency of a corporation and the appointment of a receiver do not always ipso facto bar the right of a subscriber to rescind his subscription on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation. Cook on Corporations, §§ 164, 167, 170; 10 Cyc. 441 et seq.

While it may be admitted that there is some conflict of authority on this subject, the majority and best-considered cases where the right to rescind is denied are not based upon the mere fact of the insolvency of the corporation, but for the reason that the subscriber has participated in the management of the insolvent corporation or for some other particular cause such as would create an estoppel or some other doctrine analogous to the equitable doctrine of laches. See 2 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 1447-1456.

It would be a matter of supererogation to review all the authorities; but a brief review of the leading cases on the subject considering the statements of some of the text-writers will not be amiss. That it has become the settled rule in England since the decision of Oakes v. Turquand, L. R., 2 H. L. 325, 344, that a suit to rescind a stock subscription on the ground of fraud cannot be maintained by a stockholder no matter what diligence he may have shown after proceedings have been taken to liquidate the affairs of a corporation, as has been heretofore stated, cannot be denied. Thompson on Corporations, §§ 1439-1441. Some of the American cases seem to follow the English rule, and an attempt to harmonize them when all the expressions are considered is attended with some confusion.

The action has arisen under different conditions, as where a subscriber has paid for his stock and repudiates the contract on the ground of fraud and sues to recover the price; again, where the subscriber is sued for the unpaid subscription and defends on the ground of fraud. Some of the courts have attempted to distinguish these cases on the ground that different rights arose and that different principles were presented. The question was fully considered in Bank v. Newbegin, 74 Fed. 135, 20 C. C. A. 339, 33 L. R. A. 727, where the leading cases dealing with this subject are reviewed and a conclusion reached that where a considerable time has not elapsed and there is no want of diligence in discovering the fraud, and proof of the alleged fraud is clear, that the stockholder should be permitted to rescind his subscription as well after as before the company ceases to be a going concern. See, also, dissenting opinion in Scott v. Latimer, 89 Fed. 859, 33 C. C. A. 1.

In Wallace v. Bacon (C. C.) 86 Fed. 553, while the right to a rescission is denied for the want of diligence, it is distinctly held that a subscription to stock induced by fraud may be rescinded after as well as before the corporation ceased to be a going concern, where no considerable time has elapsed since the subscription and the subscriber has been diligent in discovering the fraud and in taking steps to rescind. And in this case, which was decided in the Circuit Court of the Southern District of California, Ross, J., delivering the opinion, adopted the views expressed in Bank v. Newbegin, supra, on a right to a rescission.

In the case of Upton v. Englehart, 3 Dill. 496, Fed. Cas. No. 16,800, Judge Dillon concludes his decision on the subject as follows: "I am inclined to the opinion that if a company has virtually misrepresented or concealed material facts, and thus drawn an innocent person into the purchase of stock, he at the time being guilty of no want of reasonable caution and judgment, and after being guilty of no laches in discovering the fraud, and he thereupon without delay notifies the company that he repudiates the contract, and offers to rescind the purchase, these facts concurring, I am inclined to the opinion that the bankruptcy of the company subsequently happening, will not enable the assignee to insist that the purchase of the stock is binding upon him." And Judge Thompson in his work on corporations commenting upon this decision declares that the tendencies of American decisions support this view. 2 Thompson on Corporations, § 1449.

In Merrill v. Florida Land & Improvement Co., 60 Fed. 18, 8 C. C. A. 444, and in Florida Land & Improvement Co. v. Merrill, 52 Fed. 77, 2 C. C. A. 629, it is held that the receipt by a bank of the proceeds of a fraudulent sale of stock belonging to it and the subsequent appointment of a receiver give its creditors no such right in the proceeds as will prevent the purchaser from rescinding the sale and requiring restitution. In this case it is further said that, where it is admitted that the bank's stock when fraudulently sold was the property of the bank, and the proceeds were turned over to the bank, it cannot be said that any creditor of the bank can have such an interest as would prevent restitution; that the receiver representing the creditors has only the rights of property possessed by the bank and to allow the receiver, on the theory that there may be some bona fide creditor of the bank, to retain the proceeds of the fraudulent sale would be to give the creditors of the bank the fruits of a gross fraud which, by taking and holding, would make them participes criminis.

[1] In the case before us it is claimed by respondent that, by the declaration of insolvency of the bank and the appointment of the receiver, the rights of innocent third parties, to wit, the creditors of the bank, have intervened, and that, as the receiver represents the creditors of the bank as well as the bank, such creditors are prior in equity to appellant.

As it is admitted by the pleadings that the bank stock was the property of the bank, and that the proceeds of the sale which it is claimed was fraudulent were turned over to the bank, it cannot be said that the creditors have such an interest as would prevent restitution.

The rule might be otherwise if it appeared that the creditors had given credit to the bank on the faith of the sale of this particular stock; but his right would be a personal one and would not inure to the benefit of all the creditors generally even if it did exist. The receiver, representing the creditors, has only the rights of property possessed by the bank. Merrill v. Florida Land & Improvement Co., supra.

As in the case last cited, it is said that it must be remembered that this is a case where the bank, as a creditor, holds the proceeds of the fraudulent sale. In other words, the receiver of the bank holds property that does not belong to the bank, to which neither he, as receiver, nor the creditors of the bank, are entitled in equity or good conscience, assuming that the matters averred are truly stated.

As before stated, the authorities on this subject are numerous and are extensively discussed in the case here cited, and further comment upon them would answer no useful purpose. We feel that the leading authorities support the proposition that the mere insolvency of the corporation and the appointment of the receiver do not in themselves bar the appellant's right to a rescission of his contract considering that the bank was the real owner and vendor of the stock and that appellant was defrauded, which the complaint charges and the demurrer admits, and, this being so, petitioner is entitled to have a complete rescission of the fraudulent action complained of, provided he has not been guilty of laches.

[2] And this brings us to the second question. Where a subscriber of stock, who is induced to subscribe by fraud, neglects for an unreasonable time after the discovery of the fraud to have his subscription canceled, and in the meantime the interests of third persons become involved and would be injured by the cancellation of such subscription, the subscriber's laches is a bar to relief, and a court of equity will refuse to set aside such a subscription. Cook on Corporations, § 161.

Section 1691 of our Civil Code provides that one desiring the rescission of a contract can only accomplish same by rescinding promptly and restoring to the other party everything of value that he has received.

[3] As to whether or not the party seeking a rescission has acted promptly is a matter of fact to be determined by the proof, unless the pleadings on their face show such facts that in themselves constitute laches.

[4] Here it is alleged, among other things, that the insolvency of the bank was not known to the appellant until the closing of its doors, and that its officers had repeatedly, and up to that time, made to appellant representations of the flourishing condition of the bank. It cannot be said that the intervening time between the purchase of the stock and the insolvency of the bank is in itself such a period as would constitute laches. This is a matter which can only be determined by proof. There is nothing in the recitals of the complaint showing knowledge on the part of the appellant of the condition of the bank, nor is there any fact from which knowledge could be charged. If any such facts exist, they should be set up by answer. No such rule can be laid down declaring within what time a rescission must be made, and the decision of each case must necessarily depend upon the facts presented.

[5] The date from which laches begins to run is the time when the subscriber is first chargeable with notice that a fraud has been perpetrated upon him. 1 Cook on Corporations, §§ 162-164.

In National Bank v. Newbegin, supra, where the subscriber purchased his stock in May, 1890, and the bank failed in November, and the subscriber rescinded, and in May, 1891, filed a bill for that purpose and then withdrew his suit on the proposed reorganization, and then in November, 1891, started the suit again, the court held that under those circumstances the suit might succeed; the subscriber not having taken any part in the management. Other cases of like import will be found in Cook on Corporations, §§ 162-164.

It is clear that the complaint in itself does not present such facts as would bar appellant of his right of rescission, nor do the facts as alleged show that he has been guilty of laches.

The order sustaining the demurrer is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

19 Cal. App. 414

PEOPLE v. CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT
& TRUST CO. et al. (S. F. 5,520.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 10, 1912.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the People, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, against the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, in which O. M. Goldaracena files a petition of intervention. Judgment dismissing the petition was reversed by the District Court of Appeal (126 Pac. 516), and a petition filed for a transfer to the Supreme Court. Petition denied.

William M. Cannon, of San Francisco, for appellant. J. V. De Laveaga, of San Francisco, (E. De Los Magee, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition of the receiver for a transfer of this cause from the District Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court is denied. We are in doubt concerning the part of the opinion of the district court which seems to imply that in an action for rescission it is unnecessary for the complaint to state facts showing reasonable diligence to discover the facts constituting the fraud on account of which the rescission is asked. But whether this is correct or not, as a rule of pleading, is immaterial to the decision, because in this case the facts alleged by the petitioner in his petition for intervention, but not fully stated in the opinion of the district court, are sufficient to excuse him for the delay in making such discovery.

(163 Cal. 655)

WITTER v. PHELPS. (S. F. 5878.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1912. Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1912.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 60*)—POWER TO DISMISS—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE.

The court has power to dismiss an action for want of reasonable diligence in prosecuting it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 60*)—DEFECTS IN PROCESS—STATUTE.

The court's discretionary power to dismiss for undue delay in issuing or serving summons is not affected by Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (St. 1907, p. 712), making it mandatory to dismiss where summons has not been issued within one year, or served and returned within three years, even though the delay is for a shorter period than that prescribed by the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—PRESUMPTIONS—FACTS FOUND BY COURT—MOTION TO DISMISS.

Where affidavits presented by the parties upon a motion to dismiss are conflicting, it will be presumed on appeal from an order of dismissal that the court below found the facts to be as asserted by the moving and prevailing party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2912, 2917, 3748, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 60*)—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT.

Where plaintiff knew when he commenced an action, and at all times thereafter, that defendant resided in another county and could be found and served there, but delayed service of summons for two years and three months after it was issued, and defendant's evidence showed that the matters involved in the action had been settled between the parties, that until service he had no notice of the action, that in the meantime one of his material witnesses had died, and that the action was not in good faith, but to harass him, the granting of a motion to dismiss was within the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–152; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

5. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 50*)—WAIVER OF RIGHT TO DISMISS—MOTION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 396, which provides that an action begun in a wrong county may be tried therein, unless defendant, at the time of answering or demurring, demands a change of venue, a defendant who demurs and moves for a change of venue does not thereby waive his right to object to any previous delay in service of summons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 100–102; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Geo. F. Witter, Jr., against Josephine A. Phelps. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. F. Witter, of Oakland (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant. Ross & Ross, of San Mateo, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal.

On May 1, 1908, plaintiff filed his complaint, asking the recovery of $100,000 damages for the breach of an alleged contract. The action was commenced in the city and county of San Francisco. Summons was issued at once, but was not served on the defendant until the 3d day of August, 1910, two years, three months, and two days after the filing of the complaint and the issuance of summons. On August 17, 1910, the defendant appeared by filing a notice of intention to move for change of place of trial to the county of her residence, San Mateo, together with a demand for such change, an affidavit of merits, and a demurrer. The motion was granted, and on September 21, 1910, the papers in the cause were filed in San Mateo county.

On October 13, 1910, the defendant served and filed her notice of intention to move for a dismissal of the action, upon the grounds of long and unnecessary delay in the service of summons "and because of the laches, lack of diligence, and want of prosecution in and of said action by the plaintiff." The appeal is from the judgment entered upon the order of the court granting the motion.

[1, 2] The power of the court to dismiss an action for want of reasonable diligence in prosecuting it has often been declared by this court. First Nat. Bank v. Nason, 115 Cal. 626, 47 Pac. 595; Mowry v. Weisenborn, 137 Cal. 110, 69 Pac. 971; People v. Jefferds, 126 Cal. 296, 58 Pac. 704. In 1889 subdivision 7 was added to section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Stats. 1889, p. 398. The effect of the subdivision, which, as amended (Stats. 1893, p. 31), was in substance re-enacted in 1907 as section 581a (Stats. 1907, p. 712), was to make it mandatory upon the court to dismiss where the summons had not been issued within one year, or served and returned within three years. Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 Pac. 470; Swortfiguer v. White, 141 Cal. 576, 75 Pac. 172. But this did not affect the discretionary power of the court to dismiss for undue delay in issuing or serving summons, even though the delay had been for a shorter period than that named in the statute. Kreiss v. Hotaling, 99 Cal. 383, 33 Pac. 1125; Stanley v. Gillen, 119 Cal. 177, 51 Pac. 183; Farris v. Wood, 144 Cal. 426, 77 Pac. 1037; Marks v. Keenan, 148 Cal. 161, 82 Pac. 772; Bernard v. Parmelee, 6 Cal. App. 545, 92 Pac. 658.

[3, 4] The order appealed from must accordingly be affirmed, unless we can say that the court below abused its discretion in determining that the delay in the service of summons had been unreasonably long, and that plaintiff had failed to prosecute his action with due diligence. The record would not warrant a holding that there had been such abuse. In so far as affidavits presented by the respective parties were conflicting, it must here be assumed that the court below found the facts to be as asserted by the moving and prevailing party. So assuming, the evidence justified the conclusions that plaintiff knew, when he commenced the action, and at all times thereafter, that the defendant resided at San Carlos, San Mateo county, and that she could there be found, if it were his desire to make service upon her. The defendant's evidence also tended to show that the matters involved in the action had been fully compromised and settled between the parties, and that, until the service upon her, she was unaware of the pendency of the action. In the meantime a material witness, whose testimony would have aided in establishing the defense of settlement, had died. The plaintiff's affidavit alleged that the delay in service had been actuated by a feeling of consideration for the defendant, who was in poor health. On the other hand, the defendant's showing, which, as we have said, must be taken to have been accepted by the trial court, warranted a conclusion that the action was instituted, not in good faith, but for the purpose of harassing the defendant. Under all the circumstances, it cannot be held that the granting of the motion involved an abuse of discretion.

[5] We do not agree with the contention that, by demurring and moving for a change of place of trial, the defendant waived the right to object to any delay which had occurred theretofore. Having been served with summons, she was bound to appear, and either demur or answer. Her demand for change of venue could be made only at the time she so answered or demurred. Code Civ. Proc. § 396. She was entirely within her rights in insisting upon the change, and in making her motion for a dismissal in the court to which the action had been removed. By thus taking advantage of her rights, she did nothing which should be held to affect her right to complain of the delays which had occurred.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

163 Cal. 814

WITTER v. PHELPS. (S. F. 5,879.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1912.)

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Geo. F. Witter, Jr., against Josephine A. Phelps. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George F. Witter, of Oakland, (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant. Ross & Ross, of San Mateo, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment dismissing the action.

The facts are, in all material respects, like those in Witter v. Phelps, 126 Pac. 593 (S. F. No. 5,878), just decided, except that this action was commenced at an earlier date, and the delay in service was some months longer than in the case referred to.

For the reasons stated in S. F. No. 5,878, the judgment is affirmed.

163 Cal. 621

LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CORPORATION v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

(L. A. 2,865.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1912.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 63*)—LICENSE TAX—IMPOSING LEGISLATIVE DUTIES ON CITY CLERK.

An ordinance of the city of Los Angeles provided for the payment of license fees by persons, firms, or corporations supplying gas and electricity at a specified rate, to be based on the gross receipts of the company. One section provided for the determination of the amount of licenses from a sworn statement as to the amount of business done in the preceding quarter. Held, the ordinance is not invalid as imposing a legislative duty on the city clerk, as his acts are purely ministerial, in that he does not fix the rate of the tax, but merely determines the amount on the basis of the rate fixed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-114; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 7*)—LICENSE TAX ON PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANIES—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE.

Although an ordinance providing for the licensing of gas and electric companies at a rate to be determined by the gross receipts for the preceding quarter requires a sworn statement from the officers of the companies to be filed "within five days from the beginning of each license period," and does not specify whether the provision applies to the five days before the expiration of the quarter or the five days thereafter, the law will not require the impossible; and it will be construed to mean the five days after the quarter's expiration, to render the ordinance valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. LICENSES (§ 7*)—LICENSE TAX ON PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANIES—BESTOWING FAVORS ON NEW COMPANIES.

An ordinance providing for a license tax on gas and electric companies is not invalid for providing that newly established companies should, for the first quarter of their existence, be charged only the minimum rate, as there is nothing to prevent a municipality from bestowing such a favor on a starting business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. LICENSES (§ 7*)—DISCRIMINATION AS TO MODE OF ENFORCEMENT.

And such ordinance is not invalid for its failure to apply to certain classes of corporations a provision for the collection of the maximum license fee, on the failure of the corporation to file a statement of its business for the preceding quarter, where other sections provide for the collection of unpaid license taxes by civil process, the imposition of penalties for failure to make timely payment, and the punishment of any one operating in violation of law without a license.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. LICENSES (§ 7*) — DISCRIMINATION — VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE.

Nor is the ordinance invalid for its exception of manufacturers of acetylene gas distributed in tanks, and owners of natural gas wells receiving less than $50 a month from their product, from the burden of the ordinance, as the delivery of a product in portable tanks would not require the use of the city streets; and the presumption will be indulged that the local legislative body did not pass an unreasonable by-law, and that the number of wells, each producing less than $50, owned and operated by a single person or corporation, was not considerable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-15; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 136*)—LICENSE TAX ON PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANIES—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE—IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACT.

And such ordinance is not invalid as an impairment of the obligation of a contract, though a lighting company had an existing contract with the city for furnishing electricity to light its streets, where, at the time such contract was entered into, the city was imposing a license on such company, as the contract must be presumed to have been made with the city's right to impose a license tax in contemplation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 299, 300, 343, 362; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 111*)—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE—METHOD OF PASSAGE.

The charter of the city of Los Angeles, § 198b, provides that an ordinance shall not be effective before 30 days from the time of its final passage and its approval by the mayor, unless it be for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, and contains a statement of its urgency and is passed by a two-thirds vote of the council. It also gives the right to a certain percentage of electors to file a referendum petition within 30 days. An ordinance submitting an ordinance providing for the imposition of a license tax on a large number of professions, trades, and callings, among them gas and electric companies, to the people for a referendum election, after a petition therefor, became effective within 30 days, but was passed by a vote of more than two-thirds of the city council, and contained the recital required by the charter. Held, the early submission to a vote of the license ordinance was of such immediate importance that the method of its passage would not invalidate it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 245-256; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation against the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. A. Cheney, Geo. P. Adams, and LeRoy M. Edwards, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. John W. Shenk, City Atty., and E. R. Young and Leslie R. Hewitt, Asst. City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to prevent the enforcement against it of Ordinance No. 20,000 (New Series) of the city of Los Angeles, and seeking to have that part of said ordinance relating to the gas and electric business of plaintiff declared void. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was given against it. From that judgment this appeal is taken.

The objections of appellant to the validity of the ordinance are based generally upon its alleged uncertainty and its supposed contravention of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The ordinance provides that license shall be imposed as follows upon one of the enterprises conducted by plaintiff: "Sec. 39. For every person, firm or corporation conducting, managing or carrying on the business of furnishing or supplying electricity for light, heat or power, one-third of one per cent. of the gross receipts of such person, firm or corporation for the sale of electricity furnished within the city of Los Angeles which amount shall be payable quarterly."

[1] The provision with reference to the gas business is practically the same as that applicable to the furnishing of electricity, except the business of manufacturing and distributing acetylene gas compressed in tanks is excepted from the payment of license, as is that of furnishing gas from a natural gas well, where the amount of money received therefor is less than $50 per month. Appellant insists that these sections, standing alone, would make the license payable only after the expiration of a quarter and an ascertainment of the gross amount of business transacted by the company, and that there is no provision for the specified percentage of one-quarter's business being paid in advance for the right to operate for the coming quarter. But we find that section 4 of the ordinance thus provides for the payment of quarterly licenses: "The quarterly licenses in this ordinance provided shall be due and payable to the city on the first days of January, April, July and October, and all such licenses shall expire with the last days of March, June, September and December of each year, but the first quarterly license issued to any person, as herein provided, shall be issued for the unexpired one-third or two-thirds of the current quarter." Section 3 is as follows: "It shall be the duty of the city clerk to prepare and issue a license under this ordinance for every person, firm and corporation liable to pay a license hereunder, and to state in each license the amount thereof, the period of time covered thereby, the name of the person, firm or corporation for whom issued, the trade, calling, profession or occupation licensed and the location or place of business where such trade, calling, profession or occupation is to be carried on. The city clerk shall deliver such license to the city auditor and said city auditor shall sign and deliver the same to the city tax and license collector for collection and take his receipt for the amount thereof. In no case shall any mistake by the city clerk in stating the amount of a license prevent or prejudice the collection for the city of what shall be actually due from any one carrying on a trade, calling, profession or occupation subject to a license under this ordinance." It is evident from the foregoing quotations that the purpose of the framers of the ordinance was to require payment of the quarterly license in advance, based upon the income, in each instance, of the preceding quarter, because obviously it would be impossible to determine such income in advance. If there were any doubt upon this point, it would be removed by section 9 of the ordinance, which is in part as follows: "In all cases where the amount of license to be paid by any person, firm or corporation is based upon the amount of receipts or sales, or of business transacted * * * such person, firm or corporation shall, before obtaining a license for his, their or its business, and within five days from the beginning of each license period, if such business is established or in operation, during any part of said five days, render to the city clerk for his guidance in fixing the amount of license to be paid by said person, firm or corporation, a written statement, sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths, showing the total amount of receipts or sales, or of business transacted. * * * Such statement shall not be conclusive as to the amount of license to be paid by such person, firm or corporation. If any person, firm or corporation hereby required to make such a statement shall fail to do so, such person, firm or corporation shall be required to pay a license at the maximum rate herein prescribed for the trade, calling, profession or occupation carried on by such person, firm or corporation, and shall be guilty of a violation of this ordinance and be punishable therefor as hereinbefore provided; provided, however, that where the first license is to be issued for a newly established business no statement need be made of the amount of receipts, or sales, or business transacted, * * * and the minimum rate herein prescribed shall be charged for any newly established business, the amount of license for which is regulated by the amount of receipts, or sales, or business done * * * during the first license period in which such business is in operation."

Appellant insists that this section does not apply to cases where the amount of the license is a percentage of the business done, but to instances in which a definite license is exacted for a certain business, or those in which the callings to be licensed are classified according to their receipts. But we do not see any reason why it does not apply to all methods of levying and collecting licenses. It does not fix the amount of the license tax, for that is settled by another part of the ordinance as one-third of 1 per cent. of the gross receipts. Section 9 does, however, furnish a method by which the clerk is enabled to determine the amount which he must insert in the quarterly license. His duties are not, as appellant alleges, legislative, but are purely ministerial. A similar question was before the court some years ago in a proceeding involving the construction of an ordinance in which it was made the duty of the clerk, "in fixing the rate of license" for the several classes in the said ordinance mentioned, to "grade the same according to his best information and knowledge"; and he was empowered to require "any person to file his or her affidavit as to which class he or she may belong." Commenting upon the petitioner's assertion that this was an unauthorized delegation of power to the clerk, Mr. Justice McKee, speaking for the court, said in Re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 97, 10 Pac. 267: "The provisions, however, were only regulative of the mode of issuing and collecting the licenses imposed by the ordinance; the acts required of the clerk and tax collector were therefore ministerial; and, while it is undoubtedly true that public powers and trusts devolved by law or charter upon the governing body of a municipality, to be exercised by it in such a manner as it shall judge best, cannot be delegated to another (Birdsall v. Clark, 73 N. Y. 73 [29 Am. Rep. 105]), yet the power to do acts which do not involve judgment or discretion, but are merely mechanical or ministerial, may be delegated. 'The true distinction,' observes the Supreme Court of Ohio, 'is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.' C. W. & Z. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 88."

[2] Appellant calls our attention to the fact that section 9 does not specify whether the sworn statement mentioned therein shall be filed five days before the expiration of the quarter or five days afterwards. As the law does not require impossibilities, this provision, of course, does not apply to the five days before the end of the quarter. The provision amounts merely to an exemption from arrest during the first five days of a new quarter—a period which may be reasonably necessary to a person or corporation doing a large business, for the preparation of a statement of the gross receipts of the previous quarter.

[3] Appellant also makes the point that the ordinance is discriminative, because under section 9 no tax is fixed for persons in their line of business who fail to file statements, as that section imposes upon such persons the maximum tax prescribed, and there is no maximum tax fixed for the distributors of gas and electricity; and a further complaint regarding the inequity of the ordinance is that a newly established gas or electric company would escape the payment of license for the first quarter of its existence, because there is no minimum rate prescribed as a basis for the quarterly tax in the case of a gas or electric company. This does not render the ordinance void. While a slight advantage might thus be given to a new enterprise, there is nothing to prevent the governing body of a municipal corporation from bestowing such favor upon a starting business. As was said in Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 563, 77 Pac. 456, 65 L. R. A. 946: "We must, however, judge of the reasonableness of the ordinance in question by what we know of the general conditions, and not hold it void simply because in some exceptional case it may result in imposing unequal burdens. Absolute uniformity in the practical application of laws relating to taxation can never be attained; and to prohibit the enforcement of laws which fail to bring such absolute uniformity would be to abolish all taxation."

[4, 5] No difficulty arises from the fact that section 9 does not apply to corporations like appellant, in so far as it contemplates the collection of the maximum rate of license from persons or corporations failing to file the statement prescribed, because other sections provide for the collection of unpaid license tax by civil process, the imposition of penalties for failure to make timely payment, and the punishment of any one operating in violation of law without a license. Nor is the exception of manufacturers of acetylene gas and owners of gas wells from the burden of the ordinance inherently unreasonable. There is a vast difference between a business using the streets for pipes, wires, and conduits and one in which the product is delivered in portable tanks; and, while the owner of a great number of gas wells, each producing a revenue less than $50 a month, might escape his just proportion of the license tax, we must presume that the local legislative body, familiar with existing conditions, did not pass an unreasonable by-law, and that the number of wells, each producing less than $50 per month and owned and operated by a single person or corporation, is not considerable. As was said in Ex parte Lemon, supra: "The rule underlying the decisions upon the matter appears to be that, while the state, county, or city cannot discriminate in the imposition of those taxes between persons exercising the same privilege by imposing different taxes upon persons similarly situated, it may classify and tax occupations, grading the privilege tax by the amount of business done; that different methods of accomplishing this may be adopted; and that any classification reasonably designed to attain this object is within its power to make."

[6] Plaintiff had a contract with the city of Los Angeles for furnishing electricity to light the streets of that city during the entire year 1910. The contention is made that the imposition of a license tax impairs the obligation of this contract, because it imposes additional burdens upon one of the parties to said agreement. It appears from the complaint that plaintiff was paying a license tax when its contract with the city was made, and when the ordinance here considered was adopted by the city council. It is therefore evident that the contract was made in view of the city's right to impose a license tax upon the business of plaintiff. So long as such tax is reasonable, it is a legal imposition, and is a matter apart from the contract between the city and the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation. The fact that the taxing power is a party to a contract does not impair the right to tax the business pursued by virtue of that contract. City of New Orleans v. Crappel, 18 La. Ann. 725. While a city may, by contract, deprive itself of the power to collect license fees, that power is presumed to exist, unless an unequivocal intention to the contrary appears from the terms of the agreement. City of St. Louis v. United Railways Co. et al., 210 U. S. 273, 28 Sup. Ct. 630, 52 L. Ed. 1054.

[7] The method of adoption of Ordinance No. 20,000 (New Series) is attacked by appellant. After this ordinance was adopted by the council and approved by the mayor, a referendum petition, signed by the requisite number of electors, was filed. This suspended the operation of the ordinance, and the city council, on May 10, 1910, reconsidered it, and it was not entirely or at all repealed. Thereafter it and another ordinance were, by Ordinance No. 20,419, submitted to the people at a special election held on June 30, 1910, and consolidated with other matters previously set for determination at a special election on that date. Ordinance No. 20,419 was approved on June 14, 1910, and therefore less than 30 days elapsed between its passage and its operation. Appellant insists that, consequently, it was illegal and void. Section 198b of the charter of the city of Los Angeles provides that (a) "no ordinance passed by the city council, except when otherwise required by the general laws of the state or by the provisions of this charter, respecting street improvements, and except an ordinance for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, which contains a statement of its urgency and is passed by a two-thirds vote of the council, shall go into effect before thirty days from the time of its final passage and its approval by the mayor." (b) This is followed by general language giving the right to a certain percentage of electors to file a referendum petition within 30 days. If the ordinance calling the special election and consolidating the referendum Ordinance No. 20,000 (New Series) with other matters does not come within the exceptions mentioned in section 198b, or is not by its very nature exempt from a referendum upon it, then there is no escape from appellant's theory that it was void.

Respondent depends upon two propositions:

(1) From the very nature of an ordinance calling an election, it cannot be subject to the referendum provisions, citing such cases as Carlson v. City of Helena, 39 Mont. 113, 102 Pac. 39, 17 Ann. Cas. 1233. (2) Even if, generally speaking, an ordinance providing for a special election be subject to the referendum, the one before us was passed by a vote of more than two-thirds of the city council, and contains a full statement of its urgency for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety. It is not necessary to discuss the first of these propositions, because the second is correct. While "the mere declaration of the council in such a case that the ordinance is passed for the immediate preservation of the public health is neither conclusive nor yet sufficient" (In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 120, 99 Pac. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75), the ordinance calling the special election contains more than the mere dictum of the council regarding its urgency; for in section 7 thereof we find this language: "That said Ordinance No. 20,000 (New Series) is a penal ordinance regulating the carrying on of a large number of professions, trades, callings and occupations in the city of Los Angeles, and which affects the public peace, health and safety, and said ordinance also fixes and establishes the rates of licenses for all persons, firms or corporations engaged in carrying on such professions, trades, callings and occupations; that the said license taxes so fixed and established will form a large part of the revenues of the said city, and the collection thereof is necessary for the proper carrying on of the government of the said city." We can easily see how the early submission to vote of an ordinance affecting the conduct of a large number of professions, trades, and callings, and having a bearing on the public revenue so important as that indicated by the above quotation, would be a matter affecting the public peace, if not the public health and safety; consequently we cannot, on the record before us, question the finding of the city council upon this subject.

It follows that the judgment from which the appeal is taken must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(19 Cal. App. 536)

CALIFORNIA TELEPHONE & LIGHT CO.
v. JORDAN, Secretary of State.
(Civ. 982.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, July 22, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 20, 1912.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 18*)—CONTENTS OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—NECESSITY OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Neither Civ. Code, § 290, which specifically enumerates the matters which articles of incorporation must contain, nor section 291, which specifically enumerates such matters in the incorporation of certain classes of corporations, and which are the only sections which provide what articles of incorporation shall contain, require that certificates of acknowledgment of the execution of the articles must be made a part thereof. Held, such certificates of acknowledgment are impliedly excluded as a necessary part of the articles; and the requirement for such an acknowledgment in Civil Code, § 292, will be regarded as intended only to supply proper proof of due execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 53-59; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 40*)—AMENDING ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—NECESSITY OF ATTACHING ORIGINAL CERTIFICATES OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 362, which provides for the amendment of original articles of incorporation, but which does not require the certificates of acknowledgment of the execution of the original articles to be attached or annexed to the articles as amended, the attachment of such acknowledgment is not necessary to the validity of the amended articles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 124; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 66*)—"INCREASING CAPITAL STOCK" OR "DIMINISHING CAPITAL STOCK"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A mere classification of the capital stock of a corporation into preferred and common shares, without an increase or decrease in the number, is not an increasing or diminishing of its capital stock, within Civ. Code, § 362, which provides that a corporation may not increase or diminish such stock without complying with the special provisions of the Code applicable thereto, and Civ. Code, § 359, which provides the manner in which the capital stock of a corporation may be increased or diminished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 173-180, 449; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3518.]

4. CORPORATIONS (§§ 62, 67*)—"INCREASING CAPITAL STOCK" OR "DIMINISHING CAPITAL STOCK"—METHOD—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

Civ. Code, § 359, provides the method by which capital stock may be increased or diminished, with the proviso that, where the articles of incorporation provide for two or more kinds of capital stock, no increase or reduction shall be made without the assent of two-thirds of all the subscribed stock. Held, the Code section applies only to a change in the number of shares of different classes where the stock is already divided, and does not prescribe the procedure where the division of the stock merely involves the creation of two or more kinds of stock out of the number of shares for which the corporation was originally capitalized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 181-183, 449; Dec. Dig. §§ 62, 67.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 188*) — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—PROVINCE OF COURTS.

The courts may not by construction import into valid statutes language which has not been inserted therein by legislative authority, or take from them by like process language which the Legislature has inserted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 266, 267; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

Mandamus by the California Telephone & Light Company to compel F. C. Jordan, as Secretary of State, to file a certified copy of petitioner's articles of incorporation. Writ granted.

Wm. B. Bosley, of San Francisco, for petitioner. J. Charles Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HART, J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as Secretary of State of the state of California, to file nunc pro tunc, as of date of March 21, 1912, in his said office of Secretary of State, a certified copy of the amended articles of incorporation of the petitioner.

The petitioner, whose principal place of business is in the city of Santa Rosa, county of Sonoma, was duly formed as a corporation on the 8th day of November, 1911, and its original articles of incorporation, duly executed, and such execution, duly acknowledged, were, on the 22d day of November, 1911, filed in the office of the county clerk of the said county of Sonoma, and a copy thereof, properly certified by said county clerk, was filed with and in the office of the Secretary of State, as required by law.

Before the filing of said original articles, the petitioner complied with all the essential requirements prescribed by law for the formation of corporations, and which entitled such articles and a copy thereof to be filed in the offices of the county clerk and the Secretary of State, respectively.

"On the 19th day of March, 1912," the petition proceeds to set forth, "said corporation amended its original articles of incorporation by a majority vote of its board of directors, and by the written assent of its stockholders owning, holding of record, and representing more than two-thirds of its subscribed capital stock. Thereupon a copy of said corporation's articles of incorporation, amended as aforesaid, duly certified by the president and secretary of said corporation and of its board of directors to be correct, was filed in the office of the county clerk of said county of Sonoma. The certificate of said president and secretary attached to said copy of said articles, as amended, was duly acknowledged by said president and secretary before a notary public of the state of California in and for said county of Sonoma, who made, signed, and sealed a certificate of acknowledgment to the certificate made, as aforesaid, by said president and secretary."

On the 21st day of March, 1912, a certified copy of said copy of said amended articles, with a copy of said certificate of the president and secretary attached thereto, duly certified by the county clerk of the county of Sonoma, was presented by the petitioner to the respondent, as Secretary of State, for filing in his office. The respondent then refused and still refuses to file said certified copy of a copy of the amended articles in his office, on the ground that there is not attached or annexed thereto a copy of the certificates of acknowledgment which were attached to the original articles of incorporation, claiming that, as a prerequisite to the right of the petitioner to have the copy of the amended articles filed in the office of Secretary of State, it is essential, under the law, that such copy should have attached thereto a copy of the certificates of acknowledgment referred to.

The Attorney General, representing the respondent, has interposed and filed a general demurrer and an answer to the petition, and by argument not only undertakes to support the ground, as above indicated, upon which the respondent refuses to file the amended articles in his office, but makes the additional point that the respondent's position is further sustained by the fact that said amended articles, in violation of the statute relating to that subject, have attempted to increase its capital stock.

[1] We are unable to agree to either of the propositions advanced by the Attorney General.

1. Under the heading, "Articles of Incorporation—What they shall contain," section 290 of the Civil Code specifically enumerates, in various distinct subdivisions, the matters or facts which such instrument must contain, or, in other words, the matters which must be embodied in the original articles of incorporation, in order to legally constitute them such an instrument. That section and section 291 of the same Code (the latter having exclusive application to certain classes of corporations) are the only provisions of our law to which our attention has been directed which pretend to set forth what matters or facts shall be contained in articles of incorporation; and, in the absence of any other provision of law requiring other matters and things than those enumerated in said sections to be set out in such articles, the specific enumeration by said sections of the various facts which the articles must contain necessarily implies the exclusion, ex industria, of any other matters than those thus specifically named.

Now, then, nowhere in either of said sections are certificates of acknowledgment of the execution of articles of incorporation referred to by name or by any language furnishing ground for even the remotest inference that such certificates are any part of articles of incorporation, or that the Legislature intended that they should become or be made a part thereof. Unless, therefore, there is to be found elsewhere in the Code some provision by which such certificates are declared, either expressly or by reasonable construction, to be an essential part of the articles of incorporation themselves, we must hold that the argument advanced in support of the proposition cannot prevail. We have not succeeded in finding in any of the sections of the Code relating to corporations and their formation any language indicating that the Legislature intended to include such certificates as a part of the articles themselves, any more than the acknowledgment of a deed—a prerequisite to the right to record it—is made by the statute a part of the deed proper.

The requirement that articles of incorporation shall be subscribed and acknowledged by certain persons is contained in section 292 of the Civil Code. It is therein provided that "the articles of incorporation must be subscribed by three or more persons, a majority of whom must be residents of this state, and acknowledged by each before some officer authorized to take and certify acknowledgments or conveyances of real property." The meaning of the language of that section and the purpose of the section is merely this: That when the articles of incorporation themselves have been prepared in accordance with other requirements of the Code, the requisite number of the parties intending to form or associate themselves together as a corporation must acknowledge the due execution of the articles, and thus furnish proof that such articles have been properly executed. In other words, the primary purpose of the certificates is to secure "the state and all concerned against the possibility of any fictitious names being subscribed to the articles, and to furnish proof of the genuineness of the signatures." People v. Golden Gate Lodge No. 6, 128 Cal. 257, 263, 60 Pac. 865, 867.

[2] But the Attorney General insists that, according to the true construction of section 362 of the Civil Code, under the terms of which original articles of incorporation may be amended, it is essential that, where such articles are amended, the amendment must not only contain all the matters and things required by the statute to be embodied in original articles, but must further have annexed or attached thereto the certificates of acknowledgment of the execution of the original. But we are unable to extract any such meaning from that section. It is very true that the amendment, in addition to the alteration or change thereby intended to be effected, must contain all the facts which are required to be embodied in the original articles, in order to constitute them legal articles of incorporation. This is not only clearly indicated by the language by which the amendment is referred to throughout the section, viz., "the articles as amended," or "the articles so amended," or "the articles as thus amended"; but it is so required by this specific language: "Such original and amended articles of incorporation shall together contain all the matters and things required by the laws under which the original articles were executed and filed." In other words, the requirement is that the articles as amended must contain all the facts which sections 290 and 291, in case the corporation is of the class to which the last-named section applies, provide shall be set forth in articles of incorporation. But when this is done (and it has been done in this case) nothing further is required to entitle the amended articles to be filed, except that they shall be certified to be correct by the president and secretary of the corporation. Nowhere does section 362 declare that the certificates of acknowledgment of the execution of the original articles shall be attached or annexed to the articles as amended. It reads as follows: "Any corporation may amend its articles of incorporation by a majority vote of its board of directors, and by a vote or written assent of the stockholders representing at least two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock of such corporation, or the written assent of the majority of the members if there is no capital stock; and a copy of the said articles of incorporation, as thus amended, duly certified to be correct by the president and secretary of the board of directors or trustees of such corporation, shall be filed in the office where the original articles of incorporation are filed, and a certified copy thereof, duly certified by such county clerk, in the office of the Secretary of State. * * *

There is no other provision of the law, which has been called to our attention, requiring anything further to be done in the matter of effecting an amendment of articles of incorporation than is required by the foregoing provision, except a few other matters, provided by the same section, which are not important in the ascertainment of the meaning of the section in the respect in which we are considering it. And we can conceive of no sound reason for holding the section to have any other meaning; while there are reasons which sustain the construction of said section which appears to us to be correct. As one of such reasons, it may be suggested that the law prescribes a certain kind of proof of the due and proper execution of original articles of incorporation. Primarily, as we have seen, the purpose of such proof is to disclose that such articles have been subscribed by bona fide and not by fictitious persons, and the genuineness of the signatures. Without proof of the kind prescribed by the statute of the execution of the articles, the officers in whose offices the original articles and a copy thereof must be filed would have no authority or right to file the same in their respective offices, or, if they did so file them under such circumstances, there would still be no legally constituted corporate entity; for it is the settled rule in this state, as well as in many other jurisdictions, that, where the statute requires articles of incorporation to be filed with some public officer before the proposed corporation is authorized to engage in the business for which it has been created, the filing of such articles in the manner prescribed constitutes a condition precedent to the right of such corporation to perform corporate functions. Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55, 36 Pac. 368, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151; Capps v. Hastings Prospecting Co., 40 Neb. 470, 58 N. W. 956, 24 L. R. A. 259, 42 Am. St. Rep. 677; Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 200.

Now, since it is legally essential to the filing of the original articles that the kind of evidence prescribed by the statute of the execution thereof shall be provided, such evidence must necessarily be preserved in the offices where the filings are required to be made, so that the public, vitally interested in all corporations, may know whether such corporation has a legal existence, has the right to exercise corporate functions, and hence prosecute its corporate purposes, and may legally be bound as a corporate entity by its contracts. The mere annexing, therefore, by the president and secretary of the corporation, to the amended articles of such certificates, the original of which is already on file in the office of the clerk of the county where the corporation has its principal place of business, and a duly certified copy thereof on file in the office of the Secretary of State, could add no force to the articles as amended, either as proof of the legal existence of the corporation prior to and at the time of the making of the amendment, or of the proper adoption and due execution of the amended articles themselves. Indeed, all that the annexing of the original certificates to the amended articles could amount to would be that the president and secretary, in certifying to the correctness of such amended articles, as the statute specifically requires, had further certified that at some other time some other persons had acknowledged the due execution of the original articles, which would involve the mere certifying to a fact of which the public had already been furnished knowledge by the very character of proof prescribed by the statute.

But there is no necessity for further pursuing this discussion. The conclusive answer to the respondent's position upon this point is to be found, as before stated, in an absence of any provision, in the sections of the Code by the authority of which articles of incorporation may be amended, or in any other section, requiring certificates acknowledging the execution of original articles to be attached to amended articles.

[3] 2. There is, in our opinion, no merit in the second point urged by the Attorney General.

It appears from the petition, as it does from the original articles of incorporation, a copy of which is made a part of this record, that the petitioner was formed and organized with a capital stock of $10,000,000, divided into 100,000 shares of the par value of $100 per share. It further likewise appears that by the amendment to the original articles the petitioner has divided said numbers of shares of stock into two classes, viz., preferred and common stock; 40,000 shares being thus made preferred stock, and the remaining 60,000 shares common stock. Prior to such classification, the capital stock of the petitioner was not so divided or classified.

The petition alleges, and, as a matter of fact, it is true, unless the position of the Attorney General can be held as a legal proposition to be sound, that the petitioner has not, by its amended articles of incorporation, increased or diminished, or attempted to increase or diminish, its capital stock, etc. But upon this point the contention is that the classification of the stock in the manner pointed out in effect amounts to an increase of the preferred capital stock; and that in so increasing it the petitioner did not proceed as in such cases provided by section 359 of the Civil Code.

Among other things section 362 of the Civil Code, supra, declares that "nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize any corporation to increase or diminish its capital stock, change its name, extend its corporate existence, or increase or diminish the number of its directors, without complying with the special provisions of this Code applicable thereto."

Section 359, supra, points out how and in what manner the capital stock of a corporation may be increased or diminished; and it is, of course, admitted that in the act of classifying the capital stock of the petitioner the procedure, as thus required to be observed, was not followed. It is, however, very clear that the mere act of classifying capital stock, without changing the number of shares of such stock, cannot be held to be in any sense tantamount to increasing or reducing such stock. This proposition is too palpable to require discussion. Still it may with no impropriety be noted that there is, in reason, a marked line of difference between the act of increasing or reducing the capital stock of a corporation and that of simply dividing its capital stock into several classes or kinds, without an increase or reduction of the number of shares of such stock. Both acts can, it is very true, be accomplished only by a substantially strict compliance with the terms of the statute; but as to the first-mentioned act it is plainly manifest that the public are directly and vitality concerned in its execution. Such act, if not legally performed, might result in impairing or disturbing in some manner the rights of the creditors of the corporation, as, for instance, by withdrawing its property from the demands of creditors. The act of classifying or dividing the capital stock into two or more kinds, without any alteration or change in the number of shares of such stock, while required to be done as the statute ordains, involves nothing more than a contract between the stockholders as to how they shall divide the profits and the corporate property of the corporation, after the payment of corporate obligations. Justice Lawton, in Toledo, etc., v. Cont. Trust Co., 95 Fed. 497, 531, 36 C. C. A. 155. If the classification under such circumstances be illegal or not effected according to the statutory requirements, the result cannot affect the public, but only the stockholders. From these considerations, as well as others which need not be referred to, it must become very clear that the mere act of dividing capital stock into two or more kinds, where there is no actual increase or reduction of such stock, cannot be held, upon any rational theory, to amount to, or to have been intended by the Legislature as the equivalent of, the act of increasing or reducing the same.

[4] But section 359 contains another provision upon which the Attorney General, in attempting to support his position lays special stress, and it reads: "Provided, however, that where the articles of incorporation provide for two or more kinds of capital stock, no increase or reduction of capital stock shall be made without the assent of two-thirds of all the subscribed stock and in making such increase or reduction, the assent shall identify the particular class or classes of stock to be increased or reduced and the amount apportioned to each."

The argument is that, the petitioner having had no preferred stock previously to the classification of its capital stock by the amendment in question, the act of thus classifying said stock was, within the meaning of the language of section 359 as above quoted, equivalent to the act of increasing the number of shares of preferred stock. Or, as the Attorney General himself states his position: "The day before the increase it [petitioner] had no preferred stock. The day after it has 40,000 shares of preferred stock. The amount of the preferred stock is thus very much increased over what it was previously, being theretofore nothing in amount."

We do not think the argument thus advanced will stand under the test of a logical analysis of the provision upon which it is built up. That provision very plainly has application to those cases only where a corporation, whose capital stock is already divided into two or more classes, proposes to increase or diminish its capital stock, thus necessarily affecting, in point of quantity, one or, perhaps, all the several kinds of stock of which its capital stock consists, and not to those cases where, as here, the capital stock, being all of one class, is merely divided or classified into two or more kinds without actually increasing or reducing the original capital stock. No other meaning can be ascribed to that provision, it seems clear to us, without most seriously twisting its language out of all shape. The language, "and in making such increase or reduction, the assent shall identify the particular class or classes of stock to be increased or reduced, and the amounts apportioned to each," necessarily presupposes the existence of two or more classes of stock at the time such increase or reduction of the capital stock is made. If, as here, there is but one kind of capital stock, then obviously there would be nothing to "identify," and nothing as to which an apportionment of "amounts" would be necessary. In other words, in a case like the present one, where the capital stock is all of one kind, and the same is merely divided into two or more classes or kinds, without increasing or diminishing the original number of shares of the capital stock, the act of so dividing such stock merely involves the creation of two or more kinds of stock out of the number of shares for which the corporation was originally capitalized. This proposition would appear to be self-evident. While it may be said to be true, in a case where, as here, all the stock was originally common stock, the division of such stock into two or more kinds will result in the reduction of the number of shares of the common stock, yet, as declared, the provision relied upon by the Attorney General could not have been intended to refer to any such case, for, as seen, by its own terms it limits its operation to those cases only "where the articles of incorporation provide for two or more kinds of capital stock;" hence the necessity, as shown, for the identification of the particular class or classes of stock "to be increased or reduced."

[5] We cannot see our way clear to hold otherwise than that the respondent has failed to present any valid reason for his refusal to file in his office the amended articles involved here. Corporations are creatures of the Legislature, and the method of bringing them into existence must be found in the statutes and followed with substantial strictness to entitle corporations to perform corporate functions. And such statutes, if constitutionally valid, must be accepted as the Legislature gives them to the people; and therefore the courts have no more power or right, by construction, to import into them language which has not been inserted therein by legislative authority than to take from them, by like process, language which the Legislature has put into them. To hold with the Attorney General upon either of the propositions to which he subscribes in this controversy would necessitate the insertion into the sections of the Code pertinent to the issue submitted here language which they do not contain.

For the reasons herein set forth, a writ of mandate directed against the respondent, as prayed for in the petition, will issue out of this court. It is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

19 Cal. App. 575

JONES v. LEWIS. (Civ. 1,042.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 2, 1912.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 24*)—CIVIL ACTION—PLEADING.

Where a complaint for assault and battery alleged the assault, the means employed, and the character thereof, containing a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary language, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 426, and the answer admitted the assault, but pleaded self-defense, there was no error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-35; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 19*)—CIVIL LIABILITY.

Where defendant committed a willful assault on plaintiff without justification, he was liable for the injuries sustained, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1714.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 108*)—RIGHT TO ARGUMENT.

That the court announced his impressions from the evidence before an opportunity was afforded counsel for argument was not error; defendant's counsel having refused to make any argument, after the court had stated that his conclusions were subject to change, if subsequent arguments should suggest their impropriety, and offered to afford opportunity to make such argument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 269½; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*) — REVIEW—MATTERS OF DISCRETION.

It is for the trial court, on a motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence, to determine whether the proffered evidence would affect the decision, if introduced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by J. W. Jones against W. L. Lewis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. Davis and Paul W. Schenck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Goldberg & Meily, of Los Angeles, and Harry L. Dearing, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one for damages on account of an assault and battery. The complaint alleges that the "defendant violently and maliciously assaulted the plaintiff with a hammer, and striking plaintiff upon the arm and upon the face with said hammer, bruising and wounding plaintiff, and more particularly crushing in and fracturing the plaintiff's cheek bone under and to the left of the plaintiff's left eye." The answer admitted the striking as alleged, but undertakes to justify the same upon the ground of self-defense. The case was tried by the court. It was found that on the date mentioned an altercation arose between plaintiff and defendant, during which defendant struck plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint; that the injuries are permanent in their character; that the act of striking plaintiff was not done in self-defense, or to protect defendant in person or property. Judgment was accordingly rendered in plaintiff's favor for $1,000, which was, by consent, at the hearing of the motion for a new trial, reduced to $750.

[1, 2] We see no merit in appellant's contention that the complaint was insufficient. The assault, the means employed, and the character thereof are fully set forth. There is contained in the complaint a statement of facts constituting a cause of action in ordinary language (section 426, Code Civ. Proc.), and no error intervened in the overruling of the general demurrer. Further, the assault was admitted by the answer. The justification claimed was by the court found not to exist. The assault being admitted and found by the court, a resultant injury followed, sufficient to justify the amount of the judgment. The acts of defendant were willful, by reason of which he is responsible for the injury. Section 1714, Civ. Code. The record discloses no assessment of damages on account of malice, and a compensatory amount is not affected by a failure to find malice. The findings of fact and conclusions of law are separately stated, and the criticism in that regard is unwarranted. We see no error in the action of the court refusing a continuance; the record establishes the propriety of such order.

[3] While the court announced its decision, or, more properly speaking, the impressions produced upon the mind of the court by the evidence, before an opportunity was afforded counsel for argument, nevertheless, when its attention was called to the fact by defendant's counsel, the court said that it had merely indicated its conclusions, which were subject to change, if subsequent argument should suggest their impropriety, and offered to hear argument; but counsel for defendant refused to make any argument. No prejudicial error resulted from such conduct.

[4] Appellant contends that the court erred in denying a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence made to appear by affidavits in that regard. We see nothing in the affidavits which may be said to show newly discovered testimony. It is claimed therein that counsel for the defense had no knowledge of the extent of the injuries, and was therefore unable to present evidence in relation thereto; but an examination of the complaint shows that the defense was fully and completely apprised of the extent and character of the injuries complained of. The matter of granting a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is with the trial court; and it is for that court to say whether or not the proffered evidence is such as would affect the decision of the court, if introduced. The court in this instance determined that it would not.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 577

FAST v. YOUNG, Justice of the Peace.
(Civ. 1,122.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. August 2, 1912.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 122*)—DEFAULT—VACATION—MOTION—TIME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 859, as amended by St. 1905, p. 254, providing that a motion to set aside a judgment by default must be perfected within 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment, where an affidavit in support of such a motion alleged that defendant's counsel did not have notice that judgment had been entered against his client until October 3, 1911, and the motion to vacate was heard on October 13th, an order, made by the justice on that day, granting the motion was in time, though more than 10 days had elapsed since the entry of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-388; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 122*)—JUDGMENT—FAILURE TO ANSWER—DEFAULT—VACATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 872, provides that judgment shall be rendered as if the defendant had failed to appear and answer or demur if, on the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint, defendant fails to answer at once. Held that, where judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace for defendant's failure to answer on the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint, such judgment was a judgment by default, within section 859, authorizing a motion to vacate a default judgment within 10 days after notice thereof, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-388; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 122*)—JUDGMENT—VACATION—COSTS.

An order vacating a justice's judgment for defendant's failure to answer on the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint was not objectionable for failure to require defendant to pay costs, where it did not appear that any costs were claimed, or that any claimed were not paid at the time the order was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-388; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 122*)—JUDGMENT—VACATION—COSTS.

An order vacating a justice's judgment was not objectionable for failure to designate the costs which petitioner was required to pay as a condition to the granting of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-388; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

5. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 208*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where, on appeal from the judgment on certiorari to review the vacation of a justice's judgment by default, it appeared that the record on appeal did not contain a complete statement of all of the proceedings had in the superior court, and it was objected that the justice's order did not require defendant to pay costs as a condition of granting his motion, it would be presumed in support of the order that there were no costs assessable against the defendant at the time the motion to vacate was granted, or, if there were, that they had been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 807-817; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

6. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 209*)—REVIEW BY CERTIORARI—DETERMINATION—JUDGMENT.

Where certiorari was issued to review a justice's order setting aside a default judgment, the superior court, on determining that the order was proper, should have affirmed it, instead of entering an order dismissing the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 818-828; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Certiorari by Richard Fast against William Young, Justice of the Peace of Los Angeles Township. From a judgment dismissing the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Otto Schroeder, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Newman Jones, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This proceeding in certiorari was brought for the purpose of having reviewed an order made in the justice's court of Los Angeles township, whereby a judgment entered in an action brought in that court by the petitioner here against one Mrs. H. Grant was vacated and set aside under the provisions of section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After return made to the writ in the superior court and hearing had thereon, the court ordered the proceedings to be dismissed, and petitioner appeals.

In the justice court action the defendant, within the time allowed by law, made appearance by demurrer to the complaint, which demurrer was filed on August 9, 1911. Thereafter, on September 18, 1911, an order was made by the justice overruling the demurrer and allowing defendant three days within which to answer. No answer was filed, and, on September 28, 1911, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. Thereafter, on October 6, 1911, defendant filed a notice of motion to have the judgment vacated, on the ground that it had been taken against her through her excusable neglect, and an affidavit of merits in proper form and of sufficient substance was filed, which affidavit also set forth facts from which the justice might conclude that the neglect of defendant in failing to file her answer was excusable. Thereafter, on October 13, 1911, the motion came on to be heard, and the justice made an order setting aside the judgment and allowing the defendant to answer to the complaint.

[1] It is contended in the brief of counsel for appellant that the justice had no jurisdiction to make the order setting aside the judgment, because the motion for that order was heard more than 10 days after the entry of judgment. Section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prior to the year 1905, did provide that such a motion must be presented within 10 days after the entry of judgment. The Legislature of 1905, however, amended the section (St. 1905, p. 254), and it has since provided that such a motion must be made within 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment. The affidavit filed in support of the motion showed that the counsel for defendant in the justice court action did not have notice that judgment had been entered against his client until the 3d day of October, 1911. The motion to vacate the judgment having been heard on October 13, 1911, the order of the justice, made that day, granting the motion was made within the time provided for by the statute.

[2] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the judgment as entered in the justice's court was not a judgment "by default," from which relief is provided to be given by the provisions of section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 872 of the same Code provides that judgment is to be rendered as if the defendant had failed to appear and answer or demur where: "2. If the demurrer to the complaint is overruled and the defendant fails to answer at once." We have no doubt at all that under the provisions of the section last cited the judgment entered in the justice's court after demurrer, and upon failure of defendant to answer, is to be treated as a default judgment, and as one which may be set aside upon sufficient facts appearing, under the provisions of section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3-5] The point is also made that the justice, as a condition to the granting of the motion to set aside the default judgment, should have required the moving party to pay costs. It is not made to appear that there were any costs claimed on the part of petitioner, or that, if any were claimed, they were not paid at the time the order was made by the justice. It was not necessary that the amount of costs be specified in the order granting the motion to vacate the default judgment. Furthermore, it is evident that the record presented to us does not contain a complete statement of all of the proceedings had in the superior court. It is not shown by this record what, if anything, was made to appear to the superior court regarding the matter of costs which might have been assessed by the justice in favor of the petitioner here, who was the plaintiff in the justice court action. The record, after setting forth the contents of the return made to the writ, contains only the following order of the superior court, which is evidently only a portion of the record then made: "It is further ordered that the amended return be filed and made part of the record in this case, and that the proceedings be and are hereby dismissed." In support of the order of the superior court, we must assume, in the absence of a record showing the contrary to be true, that evidence was heard which would furnish facts in support of the order; and that therefore the superior court was satisfied from such evidence, either that there were no costs assessable against the defendant in the justice court action at the time her motion to vacate the default judgment was granted, or that such evidence showed that if there were such costs which were properly so assessable they had been paid by the moving party.

[6] The superior court made its determination in this proceeding in the form of an order dismissing the same. Upon return being made to the writ and hearing had thereon, judgment should have been entered, affirming the order of the justice's court. However, as counsel have not presented any objections to the procedure taken, we have treated the order in the light of a judgment and considered the questions presented upon their merits, and assumed that an appeal was proper to be taken from the order as made by the superior court.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

19 Cal. App. 567

Ex parte MITCHELL. (Cr. 195.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 1, 1912.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 17*)—FAILURE TO SUPPORT CHILD—CRIMINAL LIABILITY—STATUTES—POLICE POWER.

Pen. Code, § 270, making a parent's willful omission, without legal excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance for his children a penal offense, was a proper exercise of legislative power to provide for the public welfare.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-181; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 64*)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Where only a part of a statute is invalid for any reason, in order to render the whole void for the same reason, all the parts must be so interdependent that no one part can be eliminated without destroying the entire force of the whole statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-66, 195; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 64*)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY—SEPARATION.

Pen. Code, § 270, provides that a parent who willfully omits, without legal excuse, to furnish support for his child is punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison or in the county jail not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both. Section 270d, as added by Laws 1911, c. 379, provides that in such case all or part of any fine which may be imposed or collected may be paid over to a person therein named for the support of the child or children; and, in case the parent is imprisoned in the county jail, he may be compelled to work on the highways, for which service the board of supervisors may allow the wife, or some other person, for the support of the child, $1.50 for each day's work so performed; and section 1203 declares that the court may, after imposing sentence, suspend it and place the person convicted on probation. Held, that sections 270d and 1203 were separable from section 270; and hence any unconstitutionality of sections 270d and 1203, did not invalidate section 270.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-66, 195; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

4. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 32*)—SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE—ENLARGEMENT—ENFORCEMENT OF SENTENCE.

Where a person convicted of a criminal offense was enlarged under a suspension of the sentence authorized by statute, alleged to be unconstitutional, such enlargement was in the nature of an escape, which did not affect the validity of the sentence, so that on his subsequent incarceration for violation of his parole he was not entitled to release on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Application of John W. Mitchell for habeas corpus to obtain his release from imprisonment for omitting, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, and shelter for his minor children. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

Martin I. Welsh, of Sacramento, for petitioner. J. Q. Brown, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner, Martin I. Welsh, acting in behalf of one John W. Mitchell, and claiming that he is unlawfully restrained of his liberty by the warden of the Folsom state prison, at Represa, this state, seeks the release of said Mitchell through the writ of habeas corpus.

The petition discloses that Mitchell, in the month of December, 1911, was arrested upon a complaint, based upon section 270 of the Penal Code, charging him with the crime of omitting, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, etc., for his minor children. Said crime being an indictable misdemeanor or an offense of which the superior court has triable jurisdiction, Mitchell was, in due course, arraigned before the superior court of Sacramento county upon an information charging him with said crime, and upon said arraignment entered a plea of guilty.

On the day of the arraignment of Mitchell and his plea of guilty, as stated, the court before which said proceeding took place, in the exercise of the power and authority vested in the courts of this state by section 1203 of the Penal Code, made an order suspending the imposition of sentence and placing Mitchell on probation pending his good behavior; the order to that effect to remain in force for the term of five years.

On the 7th day of March, 1912, said Mitchell was brought before department 1 of said superior court, and was thereupon, after due proceedings, sentenced by said court to imprisonment for a term of two years in the state prison, which is the maximum punishment by imprisonment prescribed by section 270 of the Penal Code, under which he was charged and convicted. After the imposition of said sentence, the court, acting upon the authority given it by said section 1203 of the Penal Code, again gave Mitchell another chance by ordering the withholding of the commitment, and thus allowing him the benefit of further probation, upon certain terms, of which an agreement on his part to support his wife and children in a proper manner was one. Mitchell, upon the making of the last-mentioned order, was released; but on the 16th day of June, 1912, said order withholding the commitment and the order of probation therewith made were set aside and annulled, upon the ground that Mitchell had violated the terms of his probation. A commitment was thereupon ordered to be forthwith issued, and upon compliance with said order, and under the authority of the commitment so issued Mitchell was delivered into the custody of the warden of the state prison at Represa, where he is now confined and restrained of his liberty.

The specific grounds upon which the contention is urged that the restraint of Mitchell is illegal are that the several sections under which the proceedings above outlined were had are, for a number of alleged reasons, violative of certain provisions and inhibitions of the Constitution. These reasons may thus be briefly stated: That a person proceeded against under said sections is thus denied a speedy trial and "in part of the right of trial by jury." That section 1203, supra, in effect gives the court power to imprison for debt. That said section unwarrantably "authorizes a judge to suspend the law, in that he may suspend the punishment." That section 270d, as added by Laws 1911, c. 379, contravenes section 22 of article 4 of the Constitution, in that it provides that a fine imposed thereunder may be paid to the wife of the defendant or the guardian or custodian of the child or children of such defendant; the argument being that the diversion of the money obtained through fines so imposed constitutes a "direct appropriation of public funds for private or individual purposes," etc.

Section 270 of the Penal Code, upon which the charge against Mitchell was founded, has been, in some form or another, on our statute books since the year 1872, and was, like many of our Code sections, taken, at least in substance, from the New York Codes. Up to the year 1909, the punishment prescribed by said section for the willful omission by a parent, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance for his child was as for an ordinary, or what is often termed a "low-grade," misdemeanor. The Legislature of 1909, however, amended the section by fixing the maximum penalty at imprisonment, either in the county jail or the state prison, in the discretion of the court, for the term of two years, or by fine not exceeding $1,000 or by both. The section was not otherwise altered or amended.

The Legislature of 1903, working on certain humane lines developed by the investigations of criminologists, who had for many years devoted their time and much study to the question of a scientific treatment of criminals, passed what is known as the probation law, by which, if valid, the courts are authorized, when the circumstances justify it, to allow persons arraigned before them for public offenses to go at large on a probation, on certain conditions, such persons still, however, remaining within the jurisdiction and power of the courts, in preference to incarcerating them in prison and thus marking them with the indelible opprobrium of a convict. The manifest object of this humane enactment was and is to accomplish, if possible, the reform of those thus led astray, either through their own uncontrolled volition, or by vicious associates. The Legislature of 1905 amended this law in some particulars; but such amendment is not material to this inquiry.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

In 1911 the Legislature added a number of sections to the Penal Code, of which section 270d, supra, is one. Those sections provide a sort of scheme by which, in cases where a parent has willfully refused to support his children, all or part of any fine which may be imposed and collected for such misbehavior may be paid over to a person therein named for the benefit and support of such children; and, where the parent is given a punishment of imprisonment in the county jail, he may be compelled to work on the public highways of the county, for which services the board of supervisors may allow to his wife, or to some other person, for the support of his children, the sum of $1.50 for each day's work so performed.

[1] We do not understand that the petitioner questions the constitutional power of the Legislature to penalize the act of parents in willfully, and without lawful excuse, refusing to support and maintain their minor children. In other words, it is not our understanding that it is claimed that section 270, viewed alone or without reference to any supposed or real connection it may have with sections 1203 and 270d, of the Penal Code, is in any sense in contravention of any of the inhibitions of the Constitution. Nor can we perceive wherein such legislation can in any manner or respect offend the Constitution. Indeed, the provisions of section 270 in reality merely represent, as to the subject to which it relates, the crystallization of the power of police, under and by virtue of which the state is authorized to make all manner of reasonable and wholesome rules controlling and regulating the individual behavior of people in their intercourse with each other and toward society and government. And we are not, nor have we ever been, nor do we expect to be, advised of any case in which the constitutional right of the Legislature to enact such legislation has been successfully challenged. The necessity for such a law becomes obvious when it is considered that there is a class of parents immune from the force of civil processes, by which the duty of parents to their minor children may in certain cases be coerced; and, in the absence of a statute authorizing penal punishment for such default, the members of such class could with impunity cruelly neglect the helpless infants for whose existence they are responsible, and whose support and maintenance constitute a natural duty, and by such conduct make their minor children a charge upon others or the public, or, perhaps, drive them into habits of indolence and profligacy. In the last analysis, the supreme purpose of all government is to promote and maintain the happiness of mankind; and the very first step to that end is the giving of such care and attention to infancy as that it may be developed and nurtured into sterling man and womanhood.

But, as stated, it is not the contention that section 270 itself is out of harmony with any of the provisions of the Constitution. The proposition upon which the petitioner plants his claim to the release of Mitchell is that the other sections to which we have referred—sections 1203 and 270d—are unconstitutional and void, and that they have been so connected by the Legislature with section 270 that the irresistible effect of their invalidity is to drag with them the last-mentioned section.

We are unable to agree to the contention as thus stated. It is not necessary, in the determination of the issue submitted here, to inquire into the question whether sections 1203 and 270d of the Penal Code are obnoxious to the constitutional objections urged against them by counsel for Mitchell; for section 270 is not in any degree dependent upon those sections. Section 270 existed and was enforced as a complete act or statute for many years before sections 1203 and 270d were introduced into the Code; and it lives, not from anything contained in those sections, but from and upon its own intrinsic vitality. Eliminate the other sections entirely, and section 270 will still exist and possess the same force that was breathed into it at the time of its enactment.

[2] But assuming that sections 1203 and 270d were intended to be and are a part of section 270, and that said sections are unconstitutional and invalid, still section 270 could and would nevertheless stand as an effective provision; for it is a well-settled rule that, where a statute is valid in one part and invalid in another, the former part, if not dependent in any measure upon the latter, and can, without the latter, accomplish one or all the material purposes of the act, will be sustained, and that which is void may be eliminated and disregarded without destroying or impairing the force or efficacy of the statute for the purpose or purposes which the valid part is capable of subserving. In other words, where only a part of a statute is invalid for any reason, in order to render the whole statute void for the same reason, all the parts thereof must be so interdependent as that no one part can be eliminated without destroying the entire force of the whole statute.

[3] Section 270 is not, as we have shown, in any sense dependent for its force on the other sections. And, manifestly, the mere fact that by sections 1203 and 270d the Legislature may have undertaken to confer upon the court some unauthorized power in the matter of the disposition of cases arising under section 270 can in no degree affect the validity of the last-mentioned section. If the power thus conferred is beyond the constitutional right of the Legislature to confer on the court in such cases, then the simple result is that the legislation attempting to bestow such power upon the court must fall, but without, however, carrying with it a statute in all respects valid and having no necessary connection, so far as the latter's own force is concerned, with such invalid legislation.

[4] The result of the foregoing views is that, assuming that section 1203 is void, because violative of certain mandates of the Constitution, the effect of the course adopted by the court in the case of Mitchell, under said section, was simply a failure on its part to do its duty under the law in not proceeding with the execution of its sentence immediately upon the imposition thereof; and the mere fact that it did not thus do its duty cannot be held to have deprived it of jurisdiction to compel the execution of its judgment at some subsequent time. The enlargement of the prisoner under such circumstances would involve a void act, because in excess of the court's jurisdiction; and the effect thereof would be rather in the nature of an escape, as the prisoner could lawfully be taken at any time.

As to the contention with respect to section 270d (which was not invoked in this case, no fine having been imposed), it is very clear that, conceding, for the purposes of this case, that said section is in conflict with section 22 of article 4 of the Constitution, the act of the court, in pursuance of the provisions of said section, in improperly diverting fines imposed by authority of section 270 from the public treasury, and causing them to be appropriated to the use and benefit of the wife or minor children of the delinquent husband or father, cannot in any manner or degree invalidate or detract from the force of section 270. As before shown, even if the provisions of section 270d were incorporated into and made a part of section 270 as it now reads, the latter section could stand, after an elimination therefrom of the provisions authorizing the payment of the money from such fines as might be imposed thereunder to the wife or children of the husband or father upon whom the fine is imposed. In short, as stated, section 270 of the Code is complete in itself for all the purposes that it was designed to accomplish; and the sections of the Code at which the complaint of the petitioner is particularly aimed cannot, by any reasonable construction, be held to affect in the slightest measure its validity, or in any degree or respect impair its force.

The Texas cases cited and relied upon by counsel for Mitchell present a different situation from that involved here; and they are therefore not in point, and have no application to the facts of this case.

As to sections 1203, 270d, and 273h of the Penal Code, we can only say that they are framed on highly commendable and humane lines; and it would, indeed, be a result much to be deprecated if the courts shall ever conceive it to be necessary to declare them invalid for any reason, and therefore nonenforceable.

For the reasons herein set forth, the writ will be discharged, and the prisoner remanded to the custody of the warden of the state prison at Represa.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

19 Cal. App. 581

ANDERSON et al. v. BLEAN et al.
(Civ. 979.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 14, 1912.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 271*)—ENFORCEMENT—COMPLAINT—JOINDER OF COUNTS OR CLAIMS.

A complaint in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, alleging that the contract between the owner and principal contractor was not properly recorded, and on the theory that this rendered it void, seeking to recover the reasonable value of the services rendered, and also alleging that there was sufficient money in the owner's hands to pay all claims against the building, was not subject to general demurrer as placing plaintiff in a position to recover whether the contract was void or valid, since if a complaint contains two causes of action not separately stated, or is uncertain in any respect, the defect can be reached only by special demurrer, and not by a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 494-513; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 395*)—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY—REPETITION.

In an action involving several causes of action, it is not necessary to repeat with reference to each cause the findings which apply in common to each of the causes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 927-934, 939; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 395*)—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the findings of fact and conclusions of law in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien ended with the statement or direction that judgment be entered in accordance therewith, and it was apparent that any more specific conclusions of law, if made, would have been in favor of plaintiff, the omission of the formal conclusion that plaintiff was entitled to a lien did not warrant a reversal of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 927-934, 939; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Actions by A. Anderson and another against Margaret E. Blean and another, which were consolidated and tried together.

Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for appellants.
C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for respondent
Anderson. Austin Lewis, of San Francisco, for respondent Lehto.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to foreclose several mechanics' liens. The appeal is from the judgment alone, and is brought to this court solely upon the judgment roll.

In October, 1907, defendant John Weitzel entered into a contract with defendant Margaret E. Blean, under the terms of which he was to construct a building on land belonging to her situated in Alameda county. This contract was in writing "and a portion thereof without the plans and specifications was recorded." In November, 1907, defendant Weitzel entered into an agreement with Panttaja, Latonen & Juniki, copartners, whereby said copartners were to construct the building in accordance with the contract between Weitzel and Blean. This contract was in writing, but was not recorded. The building, however, was constructed by said firm according to agreement, and notice of completion was regularly prepared and filed. The members of this firm were made defendants in this action, but apparently no judgment was sought or taken against them. There were two actions brought to foreclose liens on the property involved, which, pursuant to an order of the trial court, were consolidated.

The complaint filed by plaintiff Anderson embraces five separate causes of action, one of which is for services rendered by Anderson himself, and the others are for services rendered by four assignors of Anderson. The other complaint was filed by the plaintiff John Lehto, and is for labor performed by him as a carpenter under employment by said copartners. Judgment went for the plaintiffs, Anderson recovering the sum of $337.90 and costs, and Lehto being awarded the sum of $49.50 and costs.

The case is well briefed, but the points presented are highly technical, and none of them in our opinion warrants the reversal of the judgment.

A general demurrer was filed by the defendants Blean and Weitzel to each of the several causes of action set forth in the complaint filed by Anderson, and defendants contend that the trial court erred in not sustaining that demurrer.

[1] In each of the causes of action alleged by said Anderson he proceeds apparently upon the theory that the contract between Weitzel and the owner to construct the building was void, and he seeks to recover the reasonable value of the services rendered, while he also states in another part of his complaint that there is sufficient money in the hands of the owner Blean to pay all claims against the building. In support of their demurrer it is objected by the defendants to this method of pleading that said plaintiff is in a position to recover whether the contract be void or valid, but we see nothing wrong in this. For aught that appears in the record, this plaintiff has simply alleged the actual facts, i. e., that part only of the contract between the owner and Weitzel was recorded, and that there was a sufficient sum of money in the hands of the owner to pay all claims and liens against the property. If these are the facts of the case, the plaintiff had a perfect right to allege them in one cause of action, and to leave the validity of the contract to the judgment of the court. If the complaint contained two causes of action not separately stated, or if it was uncertain in any respect, it was amenable to a special demurrer, but such defects in the pleading afford no ground of general demurrer.

[2] Defendants' next point is equally without merit. The court "embraced its decision in a single set of findings," and it made but one finding as to each matter which was common or applicable, to all the causes of action in both complaints, and it made a separate finding for each matter peculiar to or applicable only to any one cause of action. For example, the court made but one finding that there remained in the hands of the owner a sufficient sum of money to pay all claims against the building; and a separate finding in each cause of action as to the amount due each claimant and lienholder. This is according to the approved practice. Certain it is that in a divorce case, for example, one finding that the plaintiff and defendant are husband and wife would be sufficient where the divorce was granted upon several grounds. It would not be necessary in that case to repeat in the findings that plaintiff and defendant were husband and wife, nor was it necessary, we think, in the case at bar to repeat in the finding matters which were common to two or more causes of action. To have made a complete and separate set of findings for each cause of action would have been needless repetition, and would have retarded an examination of the record. Steam Mills Lumbering Co. v. L. A. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629; Marble Lime Co. v. Lordsburg Hotel Co., 96 Cal. 332, 31 Pac. 164.

[3] Defendants also assert that the court failed to state as a conclusion of law that Anderson was entitled to a lien.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law end with the statement or direction that a judgment be entered in accordance therewith. Such statement alone has several times been held to be a sufficient conclusion of law. In Rea v. Haffenden, 116 Cal. 596, 48 Pac. 716, the court held that a mere direction of judgment following the findings of fact was a sufficient conclusion of law to support a judgment on appeal, where, as here, it is clear that any more specific conclusions of law must have been in favor of the plaintiff. Such being the case, the omission in the conclusions of law was merely as to a matter of form, and therefore would not warrant a reversal of the judgment.

There are two more assignments of error made by the defendants. In one defendants urge that the court should have made a finding of fact as to whether or not the contract between Blean and Weitzel was void or valid. This presents the same question as that first considered in this opinion, and is disposed of by what is there said. The other point is as to an inconsistency between two certain findings of fact, and is too finely drawn and inconsequential to merit serious consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; HALL, J.

19 Cal. App. 511

GOLDWATER v. HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY. (Civ. 1,000.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 22, 1912. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 20, 1912.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 167*)—MORTGAGES—LIEN—EXTINGUISHMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 2911, providing that a lien is extinguished by lapse of time within which an action can be brought on the principal obligation, the lien of a mortgage is extinguished by the lapse of time that will bar an action on the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-653; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 167*)—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—POWER OF SALE—DETERMINATION—"LIEN."

Civ. Code, §§ 858, 2932, provide that a power of sale in a mortgage shall be deemed a part of the security, and section 2872 declares that a lien is a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust on specific property, by which it is made security for the performance of a particular act. Held, that a power of sale contained in a mortgage is a "lien," and can no longer be exercised after an action on the debt is barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-653; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4144-4153; vol. 8, p. 7707.]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 338*)—POWER OF SALE—INJUNCTION—BARRED DEBT.

Where a power of sale contained in a mortgage provided that the recitals in the deed given on a sale under the power "must be deemed conclusive evidence of the facts recited," and the right to exercise the power was barred by the fact that limitations had run against the debt, the landowner, who had paid full value for the land after the debt was barred, was not bound to pay the debt as a condition to his right to sue to restrain a sale in the exercise of the power, under the rule that he who asks equity must do equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1026-1035; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 338*)—FORECLOSURE—INJUNCTION—CROSS-COMPLAINT—DEFENSES.

Where, in a suit to restrain foreclosure of a mortgage, defendant filed a cross-complaint for a decree authorizing a sale under the power contained in the mortgage, plaintiff was entitled to plead that the exercise of the power was barred by limitations in defense to the cross-complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1026-1035; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Hyman Goldwater against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society to restrain defendant's enforcement of the power of sale contained in a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion of Supreme Court denying rehearing, see 126 Pac. 863.

Tobin & Tobin, of San Francisco, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and J. W. Bingaman, all of Oakland, and Thos. C. Huxley, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff, after an order overruling defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint and sustaining plaintiff's demurrers to defendant's answer and cross-complaint. Plaintiff by his complaint sought a decree restraining defendant from the threatened sale of land of plaintiff under a power of sale, contained in a mortgage, executed by the predecessor in interest of plaintiff, one Julia Hinz, upon her homestead, to secure the sum of $3,000 and interest.

As appears from the complaint, Julia Hinz had deceased before the attempted execution of the power, and the debt and note had also become barred by the statute of limitations, which bar is pleaded and set up both in the complaint and in the demurrer to defendant's answer and cross-complaint. The debt, as appears from the pleadings, has never been paid. The answer and cross-complaint set up the facts in greater detail than in the complaint; but it is perfectly clear from each and all of the pleadings that the mortgagor had deceased long before the attempted execution of the power, and that, likewise, any action upon the debt, note, and mortgage had become barred by the statute of limitations. An attempt was made to foreclose the mortgage by suit instituted by defendant against the executor of the last will of the mortgagor, which failed for the reasons set forth in the decision on appeal to this court. Hibernia S. & L. Socy. v. Laidlaw, 4 Cal. App. 626, 88 Pac. 730.

The points of law presented by the demurrer may be considered under three heads and are so discussed in a very able manner by counsel: (1) Is a power of sale contained in a mortgage given to secure the payment of a sum of money, owing by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, revoked by the death of the mortgagor? (2) Does the power of sale contained in the mortgage survive the barring by the statute of any action upon the debt, note, and mortgage? (3) If it be determined that the power of sale is no longer existent, for either of the reasons above suggested, may the mortgagor or her successor in interest invoke the aid of a court of equity to restrain a threatened sale under the power, without tendering payment of the outlawed, but unpaid, debt?

Both appellant and respondent have discussed these three questions elaborately and with much ability. Whether or not the power to sell contained in the mortgage is revoked by the death of the mortgagor depends upon whether or not such power of sale is a power coupled with an interest. Civ. Code, § 2356. Upon this question there is much conflict in the decisions in those states where, as in California, a mortgage transfers no title or estate in the property mortgaged.

[1] In this case, however, we do not deem it necessary to determine this question, for we agree with appellant that the ultimate determination of the matters in controversy between plaintiff and defendant depends upon the construction of sections 858 and 2911 of the Civil Code, for it depends upon the meaning of these sections whether or not the power to sell contained in a mortgage survives the bar of the statute against the debt and mortgage. Section 2911 of the Civil Code provides that: "A lien is extinguished by the lapse of the time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation." No other state in this country, so far as we are advised, has any such provision in its law. In New York the statutory provision is just the reverse; the word "not" being inserted before the word "extinguished." It is apparent that little light can be thrown upon the law of this state by decisions from other jurisdictions which have no such provision or rule of law as is contained in our section 2911. This section can have but one meaning according to its plain terms, which is that the lien is extinguished by the lapse of time that will bar an action upon the principal obligation.

[2] This at once suggests the question: What is a power to sell, contained in a mortgage? Such a power is authorized by the terms of section 2932 (Civ. Code), and by the terms of section 858 (Civ. Code) "is to be deemed a part of the security." In other words, the power to sell is a part of the security for the payment of the debt. By the execution of the power, the mortgagor has placed the property under the power of the mortgagee for sale to secure the payment of the debt. In other words, the power to sell is but a lien upon the property affected by the power. It conveys no estate or title to the land. By the terms of section 2872 (Civ. Code) "a lien is a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust upon specific property by which it is made security for the performance of an act." A power to sell land contained in a mortgage, and which is expressly by our law "to be deemed a part of the security" (section 858, Civ. Code), comes squarely within the definition of a lien. It is a lien imposed upon the mortgaged land to secure the payment of the debt. Being a lien, by the very terms of section 2911 (Civ. Code), it is extinguished by the barring, by the statute of limitations, of an action upon the debt to secure the payment of which it was given. We can see no escape from the logic which compels the conclusion at which we have arrived from a consideration of the section of our law bearing upon the question under discussion.

The argument of appellant that the language of the section suggests that its application should be confined to the remedy by action does not strike us as sound. The bar as to remedies by action in court had already been fully and completely provided for. This section was intended to do something that had not been done by the various sections relating to the time within which action may be brought. It was intended to provide for the extinguishment of the lien given upon property for the payment of a debt, whenever by the lapse of time an action on the debt or other obligation is barred. This is clearly the view of the effect of section 2911 (Civ. Code) taken in Puckhaber v. Henry, 152 Cal. 419, 420, 93 Pac. 114, 125 Am. St. Rep. 75, 14 Ann. Cas. 844, where the court points out the difference between the rule in California and other states. The court had before it the case of a pledge remaining in the possession of the creditor, which the debtor or his successor in interest sought to obtain, which is not the case here. The court said: "The effect of the California rule is undoubtedly to prevent any affirmative action on the part of the mortgagee or pledgee to enforce his lien, after the debt is barred by the statute of limitations." This is precisely what appellant is trying to do in the case at bar. By advertising the property for sale, and by the threatened sale, appellant is taking affirmative action to enforce his lien. By its cross-complaint, in which it asks for a decree directing it to proceed to sell under the power, it is also taking affirmative action.

Appellant cites the case of Menzel v. Hinton, 132 N. C. 660, 44 S. E. 385, 95 Am. St. Rep. 647, from North Carolina, as a case holding that the power of sale survives the bar of the statute as to the debt, and claims that the law of such state is similar to the law of this state embodied in section 2911; but examination of the case discloses that there is no law in North Carolina similar to our section 2911. The court had before it simply the construction of the usual statute of limitations as to the time for bringing action in court. There is nothing in the statute of North Carolina, as disclosed in the case cited, providing for the extinguishment of liens. The case is not in point. (It may be noted that Menzel v. Hinton, was decided by a divided court—three to two.)

For the reasons above set forth, we are of the opinion that the power of sale under which appellant threatens to sell plaintiff's land has expired, and it is no longer of any validity.

[3] This brings us to the third question involved in this appeal: May the plaintiff invoke the aid of a court of equity to restrain a threatened sale under the power contained in the mortgage, without tendering payment of the outlawed, but unpaid, debt? Appellant argues with much earnestness and learning that this case comes within the rule that "he who seeks equity must do equity," and within the rule of the many cases that might be cited that hold that a mortgagor may not invoke the aid of the court to quiet his title against the cloud of an outlawed mortgage, without offering to pay the unpaid debt. But in this case plaintiff is not seeking to disturb the status quo. He is not asking the court to remove a cloud upon his title, except as it may incidentally do so by preventing the appellant from taking aggressive and further action that will put upon plaintiff's title a further and additional cloud. The power involved in this case contains the provision that the recitals in the deed that may be given upon the sale under the power "must be deemed conclusive evidence of the facts recited."

Appellant is threatening to proceed to sell under this lapsed power, and, as it is alleged, will execute a deed to the purchaser under such sale. It cannot be doubted but that, if appellant should sue plaintiff in foreclosure, plaintiff could successfully plead the bar of the statute in such a suit in equity. It seems to us that plaintiff now bears the same relation to appellant, in presenting for adjudication his right to prevent the enforcement of the extinguished lien, by the affirmative action of appellant in the threatened sale which may result in a deed containing recitals that may result in extinguishing plaintiff's title, that he would bear to appellant if appellant should sue in foreclosure and plaintiff herein should plead the bar of the statute. In either case he would be setting up the bar of the statute to prevent affirmative action against him. He would be using the bar of the statute as a shield and not as a sword.

In this connection we are glad to refer to the case much relied upon by appellant as sustaining the proposition that a court of equity will not restrain the execution of a power to sell contained in a mortgage. House v. Carr, 185 N. Y. 453, 78 N. E. 171, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510, 113 Am. St. Rep. 936, 7 Ann. Cas. 185. In this case the court was divided in the proportion of four to three. The majority held that the action would not lie. The only two cases which the majority opinion cited as exactly in point are the cases of Goldfrank v. Young, 64 Tex. 432, and Hutloff v. Adrian, 112 N. C. 259, 17 S. E. 78. In the Texas case the sale was under a trust deed, which conveyed the fee to the trustee; and the North Carolina case was in a jurisdiction where suits by a plaintiff in possession will not be entertained, where such plaintiff can defend against the suit of the purchaser in ejectment. Neither of these cases lends much support to the rule followed by the majority opinion in House v. Carr. Upon the other hand, the other three judges agree in an opinion written by Vann, J., which to our minds presents most cogent reasons why the action should be sustained. This opinion very fully points out the reasons that have suggested themselves to this court as sound reasons why this plaintiff should be permitted to invoke the aid of the court to protect himself and his title from a threatened aggressive attack—an attack, which, because of the language of the power, may result in unlawfully depriving plaintiff of his property, for which, as it appears from the allegations of the pleading, he paid full value after the claim of appellant had been barred and its lien extinguished. For these reasons we do not think that this case comes within the rule that a plaintiff may not invoke the aid of a court of equity to quiet his title against the cloud of an outlawed, but unpaid, mortgage.

[4] Certain it is, we think, that plaintiff had a right to plead the bar of the statute as a defense to appellant's cross-complaint, in which he sought for a decree directing and expressly authorizing a sale under the power, and the ruling of the court upon the demurrer to the cross-complaint was undoubtedly correct. Marshutz v. Seltzor, 5 Cal. App. 141, 89 Pac. 877.

Upon the whole case, we think the court did not err in its rulings upon the demurrers, and that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

19 Cal. App. 511

GOLDWATER v. HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY. (S. F. 5,603.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1912.)
MORTGAGES (§ 334*)—FORECLOSURE—POWER OF SALE—EXTINGUISHMENT—DEATH OF MORTGAGOR.

Where a note secured by mortgage had become barred by limitations, the mortgagee thereby ceased to have any interest in the land, as a lienholder or otherwise, in the enforcement of the power of sale contained in the mortgage, and the power thereby became a mere naked one, which terminated on the death of the mortgagor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1017, 1018; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Hyman Goldwater against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Petition for hearing in Supreme Court denied.

Tobin & Tobin, of San Francisco, for appellant. Reed, Black & Reed and J. W. Bingham, all of Oakland, and Thos. C. Huxley, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. We deem the opinion of the District Court of Appeal (126 Pac. 861) herein correct, regardless of the question whether a power of sale included in a mortgage is, or is not, technically a lien on the land. At the time the defendant attempted to execute the power, the debt, note, and mortgage had become barred, and the mortgagor was deceased. The lien of the mortgage was therefore extinguished, and the mortgagee, as holder of the power, was without any interest whatever in the land, as lienholder or at all. Consequently, on well-settled principles, the interest once coupled with it had then ceased to exist, it had become a naked power, and, the mortgagor who made it being dead, the power had terminated with the extinction of the interest.

The petition for a hearing in the Supreme Court is denied.

(163 Cal. 405)

GALLATIN et al. v. CORNING IRR. CO. et al. (Sac. 1,936.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 5, 1912. Supplemental Opinion Sept. 4, 1912.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§§ 130, 132*)—FLOOD WATERS—APPROPRIATION—"PARCEL."

Flood waters which are of no substantial benefit to the riparian owner or to his land, and are not used by him, may be taken at will by any person who can lawfully gain access to the stream, and conducted to lands not riparian, and even beyond the watershed, without the consent of the riparian owner and without compensation to him. They are not a part of the flow of the stream which constitutes "parcel" of his land within the meaning of the law of riparian rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. §§ 130, 132.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5166, 5167.]

2. COSTS (§ 12*)—ALLOWANCE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

In an action involving defendants' rights to take waters from a stream, it was not an abuse of discretion on awarding judgment sustaining their right to take flood waters to give them judgment for costs, where, at the trial, they disclaimed right to take any other waters, and where the head gate completed by defendants before the action was begun showed that the ordinary flood would not reach it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 20, 22, 23; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 39*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—LANDS AFFECTED.

Only tracts which border upon a stream, and not all the land within the watershed, are endowed with riparian rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 31; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 130*)—FLOOD WATERS—RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

Since the flood waters of a stream do not come within the protection of the law of riparian rights, a riparian owner is not entitled to claim them against an appropriator on the theory that the riparian owners may at some indefinite future time determine to construct a reservoir on their lands to impound such flood waters for use during the dry season.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 140*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—PRIORITY OVER APPROPRIATION.

Rights of riparian owners are paramount to those of appropriators under the Civil Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

Where the evidence is conflicting, but was sufficient to prove the facts on which the decision was based, the findings of the trial court are conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

On judgment awarding defendants' right to take flood waters from a stream, plaintiffs, riparian owners, are not entitled to complain of inaccuracies in the trial court's findings in describing the condition and size of the bed of the stream at and about defendants' head gate, where the judgment requires the bed of the stream to be kept in such condition that it will never take any other water than flood waters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4234-4239; Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 484*)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—HYDRAULIC ENGINEERING.

In a suit involving the right to take flood waters from a stream, a witness, though not a hydraulic engineer, was properly permitted to testify to rough measurements which he made and caused to be made of the quantity of water flowing in the creek, where he took the speed of the current and the width and depth of the stream at the point of measurement, and from that calculated the quantity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2267; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 267*)—CROSS-EXAMINATIONS—SCOPE—DISCRETION.

The extent of cross-examination is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 923-930; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

10. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

In an action involving the right to take waters from a stream, evidence concerning the relative elevations of a head gate and the stream and the physical characteristics of the stream at that point are not to be deemed newly discovered, if there was ample time within which plaintiff might have ascertained the facts before the trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 207, 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding supported by substantial evidence is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

12. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 152*)—APPROPRIATION OF WATERS—ADJUDICATION OF RIGHTS—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.

In a suit involving conflicting claims upon the flow of a stream, a judgment requiring defendant to provide for the permanent maintenance of an existing head gate under existing conditions to secure the present capacity of the stream at such head gate so that there shall flow past the head gate the usual and normal flow of the stream, including the usual flood waters before there shall be any diversion of flood waters by defendant, is not so uncertain as to authorize defendant to take any part of the ordinary flood flow of the stream, nor is it insufficient for failing to specify in miner's inches, or in any other artificial measure, the water that must flow in the stream before defendant takes any.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 156, 157; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1195*)—LAW OF CASE.

The construction given by the Supreme Court on appeal to a trial judgment constitutes the law of the case, and binds the lower court in all subsequent proceedings, and whenever interpretation of the judgment is material.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661-4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

14. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 714*)—REVIEW—PAPERS NOT IN RECORD.

On appeal, a map not constituting part of the record cannot be considered for any purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2958-2963; Dec. Dig. § 714.*]

15. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 714*)—REVIEW—AFFIDAVITS.

On appeal, affidavits used in the trial court in support of a motion for new trial cannot be considered in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2958-2963; Dec. Dig. § 714.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; A. J. Buckles, Judge.

Action by Malvena Gallatin and others against the Corning Irrigation Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff (Heller, Powers & Ehrman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. Frank Freeman, of Willow, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs appeal from a judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Each plaintiff owns a parcel of land which, it is claimed, abuts upon Elder creek and South Elder creek, in Tehama county. South Elder creek is a tributary to Elder creek. The aggregate area of the several parcels is about 47,000 acres. The prayer of the complaint is that the defendants be enjoined from diverting or interfering with the water of South Elder creek so as to prevent it from flowing down the natural channel thereof to and upon the lands of plaintiffs. The complaint alleges that all the waters of South Elder creek are required by them for use upon their said lands and are necessary for that purpose, that during the irrigating season they are insufficient to supply said needs, and that their lands are also irrigated by the natural seepage and percolation from said stream. It is further alleged that the defendants threaten, intend, and claim the right to take from South Elder creek a flow of 5,000 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and carry the same to nonriparian land and outside the watershed of said stream, to the injury of the plaintiffs' lands.

The answer denies that "all of the lands" of plaintiffs abut upon the stream, and avers that but a small portion of them "are riparian lands upon and along said stream," and that the waters thereof flow naturally to and upon only a small portion of said lands. It denies that the water of the stream is insufficient during the irrigating season for the needs of the respective plaintiffs. It further avers, in effect, that the defendants do not claim, or intend to take, any of the waters of said stream during the irrigating season, or any of the ordinary flow at any season, and that the only claim of defendants is that of the Corning Irrigation Company, which company claims the right to take and intends to take from South Elder creek the flood waters flowing therein during the months of December, January, February, and March of each year, to the extent of 5,000 inches measured under 4-inch pressure and no more, and carry the same to nonriparian land outside of the watershed of said stream, to be there used for irrigation and other purposes. It further alleges that during the said months of each year South Elder creek carries flood waters to the extent of 25,000 inches, and the main Elder creek 25,000 inches more, all of which flow unobstructed past the lands of the plaintiffs and into the Sacramento river, none of which can be applied by plaintiffs to irrigation, that said flood water is unnecessary for any beneficial purpose or use on their lands, and that, if said company does not take the proposed 5,000 inches of water, the same would run into the river and serve no useful purpose.

The findings set forth the facts with perhaps unnecessary detail. We give here their substance and effect with respect to the claim of the right to take flood water. South Elder creek, and Elder creek below the junction, flow through the lands of the respective plaintiffs. A considerable portion of the lands of each abuts thereon. It is unnecessary to state the exact area of the riparian land. The normal and usual flow of South Elder creek, including not only the flow in the dry season, but also the usual normal flood waters in the winter or wet season from rains and melting snows, is equal to at least 5,000 miner's inches, but this "does not include the waters that come down the stream in times or seasons of unusual freshets and floods from rains and melting snows." The head gate by which the Corning Irrigation Company intends to divert water from South Elder creek is built in the side of the steep bank thereof with its floor three feet and eleven inches above the bed of the creek at that place. In consequence, the entire usual and normal flow of the stream, as above defined, will flow down the stream and pass the head gate without any of it entering the gate or being diverted thereby. It is not expressly stated in the findings, but the inevitable result of these facts will be that said head gate will not receive or divert any part of the usual or normal flow or of the usual or normal flood waters of the creek, and will not divert or receive any water therefrom except a part of the water that comes down during times of unusual freshets and floods which are sufficient to raise the surface of the stream above the level of the floor of the head gate. The head gate is so constructed that it will divert approximately 5,000 miner's inches of the water of the creek when the stream rises to the top of the aperture. The diversion of that quantity of such unusual flood waters during said months will in no wise damage the plaintiffs. At times during said months there is flowing in said Elder creek at said head gate a volume of water equal to 60,000 miner's inches, or more, and the water rises at such times until it is 10 feet deep at that point, being 6 feet above the floor of the head gate. There is not at such times, or at any time, any overflow of South Elder creek or of Elder creek; the banks being high enough to confine its waters along its whole course, except near the Sacramento river, where the flood waters are confined by artificial levees. There is no percolation or seepage of water from the creek to the adjacent land. The head gate was constructed by said company in the fall of 1908 for the purpose of thereby diverting 5,000 inches of said flood waters during said months of December, January, February, and March, to be conducted to a storage reservoir and used for irrigation on nonriparian lands outside of the watershed of Elder creek and its tributaries. It was made before this action was begun.

[1] These facts present the question whether or not flood waters, of the character proposed to be diverted from South Elder creek by the company, may lawfully be taken from the stream for use upon nonriparian lands and outside of the watershed of the stream, without the consent of the riparian owners and without compensating them therefor. In other words, whether the right to have such flood waters flow down the stream in its usual course, under the circumstances here disclosed, is one of the riparian rights attached to lands abutting upon the stream, as parcel thereof, which the owner of such lands may enforce against one who proposes to divert the same to nonriparian lands, where no use is made of such waters on the riparian land and no benefit accrues to riparian land from their passage over the bed of the stream, and no damage is caused to the riparian land from the proposed diversion.

The question is not entirely new in this state. In Miller v. Bay Cities Water Co., 157 Cal. 256, 107 Pac. 115, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772, Miller & Lux v. Madera, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391, and Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Co., 145 Cal. 652, 79 Pac. 439, the question of the right to divert flood waters was considered in cases where the trial court had decided that they formed a part of the regularly recurring flow of the stream during a considerable period of each season, or where it appeared that such flood waters were necessary to supply the gravel strata and artesian basins under the lands of a valley, from which water was obtained to supply the overlying lands. These cases are not parallel to the case at bar. The case of Anaheim, etc., v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 327, 88 Pac. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, is cited by the appellant. It does not decide anything at all concerning flood waters. The portion of the opinion in which such waters are mentioned merely declares the rule that a riparian owner may enjoin a diversion of the ordinary flow without a showing of present damage. This is decided in many other cases, but none of them lays down any rule with respect to riparian rights in flood waters such as those involved here. In Edgar v. Stevenson, 70 Cal. 286, 11 Pac. 704, Heilbron v. Land & Water Co., 80 Cal. 194, 22 Pac. 62, Modoc, etc., Co. v. Booth, 102 Cal. 151, 36 Pac. 431, Fifield v. Spring Valley W. W., 130 Cal. 552, 62 Pac. 1054, and San Joaquin, etc., Co. v. Fresno Flume Co., 158 Cal. 626, 112 Pac. 182, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832, the court was dealing directly with the question of riparian rights in flood waters. The last-named case is the latest statement by this court upon the subject. It appears to be direct authority for the contention of the defendants. In that case the defendant, by means of a dam in Stevenson, creek at the foot of a mountain meadow through which it flows, made a reservoir of the meadow, impounding therein the water from the rains and snows falling upon the watershed above, including, necessarily, the water of excessive rains and freshets from melting snows. By this means it made such a salvage of water that, after taking from the reservoir and out of the watershed a large and constant stream of water for its own uses, the ordinary flow of the stream was not diminished, but, on the contrary, was increased, and the stream continued to deliver more than its usual quantity of water to the plaintiffs' lands and diversion works below. One of the plaintiffs was a riparian owner. The other was an appropriator of water from the stream. Thus, it will be seen, the water which the defendant actually took was not water of the ordinary flow of the stream, but was the accumulation of the flood waters flowing in the stream during excessive rains and in the season of the melting snows. It was of the same character, with respect to the stream, as that which the defendant company proposes to take from South Elder creek. The opinion gives a careful review of all the cases above cited on the subject. The conclusion is thus stated: "It will be found, therefore, that the decisions of this state, not only do not deny the right to the use of storm and flood waters, but encourage the impounding and distribution of those waters wherever it may be done without substantial damage to the existing rights of others." Thereupon the court affirmed the judgment of the court below denying the injunction against the maintenance of the dam and diversion of the water by the defendant. The facts of the Fifield Case are also similar to the present case. The defendant there proposed to take only the storm water of the stream flowing therein "during times of extraordinary high water or freshets * * * during and after a rain storm and which are in excess of the ordinary flow," and use it out of the watershed, leaving the ordinary flow to go down the channel undiminished. No damage was caused to the plaintiff's land thereby. It was held that the defendant could lawfully take such water, citing the Modoc Case as authority. The Modoc Case, though somewhat obscure in its statements, obviously holds that flood waters may be taken for nonriparian uses at times when the flood is so great that the water diverted therefrom could not be used by the riparian owner, and the diversion would cause no injury to him or his land, and would greatly benefit the appropriator. A similar doctrine is stated in the Edgar Case and in the Heilbron Case. These decisions, in effect, establish the just rule that flood waters which are of no substantial benefit to the riparian owner or to his land, and are not used by him, may be taken at will by any person who can lawfully gain access to the stream, and conducted to lands not riparian, and even beyond the watershed, without the consent of the riparian owner and without compensation to him. They are not a part of the flow of the stream which constitutes "parcel" of his land, within the meaning of the law of riparian rights.

This rule does not conflict with the decisions in the Bay Cities and Miller & Lux Cases first above cited. In those cases the water in question, although in a sense high water, or flood water, was nevertheless a part of the regular and usual flow of the stream for a considerable part of each year and at a time when such flow was of substantial use and benefit to the riparian lands, or the flow of such waters in their accustomed place was necessary to the gathering of water in subterranean strata from which the owners of overlying land were entitled to take it. The decisions were based on these facts, neither of which exists here, according to the findings.

The judgment declares that the full normal and usual flow of South Elder creek at defendant's head gate is equal to at least 5,000 inches, and that plaintiffs, as riparian owners along the stream, are entitled to have the full, usual, and normal quantity of water of the creek (whether more or less than the 5,000 inches, as we understand its terms), flow down the stream by said head gate, including both the usual and normal flow in the dry season and the usual and normal flow in the winter season from rains and melting snow, but not including the additional water that comes down the stream in times of unusual freshets from rains and snows, and that plaintiffs are also entitled to have all other waters of the stream flow therein, except the 5,000 inches awarded to the defendant corporation. It then declares that said corporation is entitled to divert and take, during the months above named, by means of its said head gate, for use outside the watershed, 5,000 inches of the flood waters of the creek, and no more, after the usual and normal flow to the plaintiff has been provided. There is also a provision that said company shall keep its head gate of its present capacity and as it is now situated with respect to the bed of the creek, and shall maintain the bed of the creek for its entire width of 30 feet at a level at said gate 3 feet and 11 inches lower than the floor of the head gate, so that there shall flow in said creek past the head gate the usual and normal flow of water before there shall be any diversion of water by said company. This judgment, in effect, terminates any right or claim the defendants may have had under the notice of May, 1908, or otherwise, to any water of the creek other than the flood waters described. Under the view we take of the law concerning flood waters, as above stated, it is supported by the findings.

In using the term "inches" or "miner's inches" in this opinion we mean to designate an inch of flowing water, miner's measurement, measured under a four-inch pressure. The findings define the quantity thus indicated, so that there can be no uncertainty in the judgment regarding it. It appears that the defendants, other than said corporation, are its directors, and that they are not otherwise interested.

The complaint was filed on December 8, 1908. According to its allegations, the defendant company proposed to take 5,000 inches of water of the ordinary flow of the stream, under a notice of appropriation posted in May, 1908, and was proceeding to construct the diversion works therefor, and would complete them and take the water if not restrained. The answer was filed on February 3, 1909. It alleges that the 5,000 inches of flood waters, which alone the company intends to take, are claimed under a notice posted in January, 1909, after the action was begun. It denies that the company claimed anything under the notice posted by it in May, 1908. It admits, by failure to deny them, the allegations that for several months before the action was begun the company was actively engaged in the work of diverting the waters of said stream to be used on outside lands, that it posted the notice of May, 1908, and that the same was posted with the intent to claim and take water from said stream thereunder, but it alleges that said work was done to prepare for the claim afterward made by it under said notice of January, 1909, and that it now claims no right except under the last notice.

[2] At the trial the defendant expressly stated that it had abandoned all claim of right or intention to take water under the notice of May, 1908, set forth in the complaint, or to take water at all except under the notice of January, 1909, aforesaid, referring to flood waters only. This entirely eliminated the question of the right and intent of the company to take a part of the usual and ordinary flow of the stream. And, as the judgment gives the company no right at all except to 5,000 inches of the additional flood waters coming down the stream in unusual freshets from rains and snows, the evidence as to the other water right once claimed by respondents, and errors of law in admitting or excluding evidence of it are, for the purposes of this appeal, wholly immaterial and harmless, except upon the question of costs, which, however, the appellants do not mention in their briefs. The facts that defendants made such a claim before the action was begun and abandoned it at or before the trial might have some bearing upon the right of plaintiffs to recover costs of suit. This is an equitable action in which costs are allowed, apportioned, or withheld in the discretion of the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1025. The head gate was completed a month before the action was begun, and its position showed that the ordinary flow would not reach it. Under all the circumstances, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in giving defendants judgment for costs. The appellants specify many particulars in which they claim the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. They also assign numerous errors of law occurring at the trial. A large number of these are, for the reasons just stated, immaterial. We need consider those only which could in some manner affect the judgment actually given.

[3-5] It is claimed that the finding that the diversion of the unusual flood waters proposed by the defendant company will not damage the plaintiffs is contrary to the evidence. There was some evidence to the effect that on Elder creek, below the defendant's head gate, there is a reservoir site where, by a dam across said creek, enough water of the flood and winter season could be caught and stored to irrigate 3,000 acres of land in the driest year and a large additional acreage in the average years. This site is partly upon the lands of Gallatin, but chiefly upon the land of others who are not parties to the suit. If this reservoir were made and the several plaintiffs should obtain the right to receive water therefrom, they could irrigate a larger area of their land than can be irrigated by the natural flow during the irrigating season. The evidence does not clearly show how much of their lands are really riparian to the stream. At the trial it seemed to be conceded that all of it that was within the watershed of the stream was riparian land to which the water of the stream was of right attached. In law, however, only the tracts which border upon the stream are endued with riparian rights. Anaheim, etc., Co. v. Fuller, supra. The appellants suggest, rather than argue, that, by reason of this possible reservoir site, they, or some of them, may at some indefinite future time determine to construct the necessary dam, and may obtain the right to flood the lands to be covered by the impounded water, and may secure sufficient funds and thereupon build the costly structure and the necessary distributing ditches to use the water on their lands, and that, in that event, they would be entitled to collect, store, and use the unusual flood water of the stream, a part of which is awarded to the defendants by the judgment; that this prospective use is a part of the riparian right, and hence that a judgment giving an appropriator for non-riparian use flood waters which plaintiffs might thus eventually be able to take and use is an invasion of their vested rights and necessarily erroneous. It may be doubted whether a possibility so remote as this would be included within riparian rights under any circumstances, or, at least, whether such possibility would justify a court in enjoining the actual use of such flood waters in order to preserve the riparian owner's right to the possibility. But, however this may be, if the decisions above cited and the conclusion deduced therefrom that such flood waters do not come within the protection of the law of riparian rights be correct, it is obvious that this argument or suggestion is of no force. The precise area of the plaintiffs' lands which are actually riparian is not of importance to the decision of the case. It appears from the findings and also from the evidence that there is a sufficient quantity of it to give them a standing as riparian owners upon the stream and to entitle them to enforce all the rights belonging to such owners. The rights of riparian owners are paramount to those of an appropriator under the Civil Code. As riparian owners they were entitled to enjoin the taking by the defendants of any water which belonged to them as riparian owners or which would injure or destroy their riparian rights. Our conclusion that the water which the defendants propose to take does not pertain to the riparian right makes the evidence concerning the recording of the notice of January, 1909, and as to the exact amount of riparian land, immaterial to the judgment, and errors in relation thereto require no consideration, as they could not operate to the prejudice of the appellants. This also applies to the evidence or lack of evidence of the fact that the defendant proposes to apply the water to a useful purpose. It does appear that they propose to use it to irrigate land outside of the watershed of the creek. But, as the plaintiffs have no right to the unusual flood waters, it is immaterial to them whether the defendants use it or not.

[6] It is also claimed that the evidence is insufficient to show that there was no percolation or seepage of water from the creek which benefited the riparian land. The evidence on this subject was conflicting. There was sufficient evidence to prove the fact, and hence the decision of the trial court is conclusive on appeal. On this point, however, it may be said that there was ample evidence from which the court might well have concluded that the water to be taken by the defendant would have no appreciable effect upon such seepage or percolation as may occur, and that its flow down the stream would not in that manner benefit the plaintiffs' lands.

[7] The description of the condition and size of the bed of the creek at and about the head gate, as given in the findings, may not be entirely accurate. It is difficult to describe such conditions in words so as to make it entirely clear. The essential finding in this regard is that the head gate is situated at such a height above the stream that it will not divert any water therefrom excepting during the unusual floods and freshets mentioned. The judgment requires the bed of the creek to be kept in such condition that it will never take any other water, and it specifies the width and depth at which the channel of the creek is to be maintained for that purpose. This will sufficiently protect the plaintiffs against the taking of the ordinary flow and ordinary flood waters. The accuracy of the description in minor details is therefore unimportant. It is said that there is no line of demarcation shown, either by the evidence or the findings, between the ordinary and usual flow of flood waters and the extraordinary and unusual flow from which the defendants are entitled to take. In the nature of things this must be so. In course of time there will be every degree of variation in this flow. In general, the fact seems to be that the stream rises in the mountains and the bed thereof runs upon a considerable grade until it reaches a point about 12 miles from the Sacramento river. Down this steep grade in the winter season the water flows with great velocity and at considerable volume. During ordinary rains and for a considerable time between such rains it carries what may be called the usual and ordinary flood water, but at the time of any hard rain and for a short period thereafter very large additions are made to the water in the stream, and this addition is carried on to the river without contributing anything whatever in the way of benefit to the lands of the plaintiffs or any other person. It is a part of this water which the defendant company proposes to take and which the judgment awards to it. It is clear from the evidence that the amount proposed to be taken will seldom include all of this flood water, and frequently not even a large proportion of it. We think the evidence sufficiently sustains the finding of the court that 5,000 miner's inches will include all of the ordinary and usual flow of flood waters during the winter season, but the finding as to the exact number of inches is immaterial.

[8, 9] A witness who was not a hydraulic engineer was allowed to testify to certain rough measurements he had made and caused to be made of the quantity of water then flowing in the creek. It is claimed that he was incompetent to testify upon such matters. We think the ruling admitting the evidence was not erroneous. His methods were correct in principle; that is, he took the speed of the current and the width and depth of the stream at the point of measurement, and from that calculated the quantity. The result was not as accurate as a more precise and complete measurement would have given, but it furnished some evidence of the quantity and its weight was for the trial court to determine. The cross-examination of the witness Jewett as to his qualifications to make such measurements was, perhaps, too much restricted, but it appears that he pursued the usual and correct method of measurement. He measured sufficiently to ascertain the area of a cross-section of the creek, he put a bench mark on the bank from which the altitude of the surface of the water could be readily ascertained at any time, and he ascertained with fair accuracy the speed of the current at that place. It does not appear that the court was required to allow an extended cross-examination on such a subject. The extent of cross-examination is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court.

[10] With regard to the contention that a new trial should have been ordered because of newly discovered evidence concerning the relative elevations of the head gate and the creek and the physical characteristics of the creek at that point, it is sufficient to say that the answer, disavowing any claim to the usual flow and claiming only the flood waters, was filed in February, 1909, and that the trial began in December, 1909. The evidence could not be deemed newly discovered, since there was ample time within which the plaintiffs might have ascertained all of these facts before the trial.

Many other objections were made in the course of the trial which are assigned as error. In view of the conclusions we have reached concerning the respective rights of the parties in the flood waters, the greater number of these are wholly immaterial. Of those remaining we have mentioned the only ones which we deem of sufficient importance to justify remark.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

Supplemental Opinion.

SHAW, J. After the opinion herein was filed, the plaintiffs applied to have the judgment of this court and the court below modified. They claim that the judgment of the lower court is so uncertain in its terms that if left unmodified there is danger that it may be understood to permit the defendant company to take a part of the ordinary flood flow of the stream.

[11] The findings state, in effect, that the defendant's head gate is 47 inches higher than the bottom of the creek at that point, and that at that comparative elevation (and this is the controlling fact) it will not divert any of such ordinary flood water; in other words, that it is only the occasional and unusually high floods which are high enough to enter the gate at such elevation, and that, when such flood does so enter, there will be a quantity flowing down the creek and passing the head gate equal to the ordinary flood flow thereof. There is substantial evidence to support this finding, and hence we not only cannot set it aside, but must accept it as fact. Hence, under present existing conditions as the findings state them, the defendant cannot divert any of the ordinary flow or usual flood water.

[12] The third paragraph of the judgment provides that said corporation defendant "shall provide for the permanent maintenance of the said head gate under the present existing conditions and for the present capacity of said creek at the said head gate * * * so that there shall flow in said creek past said head gate the usual and normal flow of the waters of said creek at said point, as herein defined (i. e., including usual flood waters), before there shall be any diversion of flood waters by defendant corporation." If this is done and the findings are true, as we must presume, the plaintiffs will be perfectly protected in their right to the usual flow and ordinary flood waters. It is in the nature of a mandatory injunction. The defendant corporation and its officers, agents, and employees will be subject to punishment for contempt if they disobey it. The provision applies to and safeguards against changes of conditions from any cause, natural as well as artificial. If, for example, a flood should fill in the bed of the creek with rocks at that point so that a part of the ordinary flood water would enter the gate, or so that water would enter it at a lower stage than under present conditions, the defendant could be compelled to refrain from diverting any water at all until it had restored the creek to the same condition, with respect to its capacity to carry water past the gate, as that in which it was at the time the judgment was rendered. An artificial change would entail the same consequences.

It is suggested that it is uncertain because it does not specify in miner's inches, or in any other artificial measure of quantity, the amount of water which must be suffered to flow in the creek before the defendant takes any. The number of miner's inches is not the criterion given by the judgment, but it is certain nevertheless. The existing conditions, whether expressly stated or not—that is, the comparative elevations of the creek bed and the floor of the gate, the various natural widths and grades of the creek at and near the gate, the directions of its course, and the roughness and irregularities of its bed at all places near enough to the gate to affect its capacity at that point—absolutely determine its carrying capacity at that point. These conditions the defendant must preserve, and, so long as they remain the same, the capacity will remain the same.

[13] The reference in the first paragraph of the judgment to the usual and normal flood waters as a "volume of water equal to at least 5,000 miner's inches" does not adjudicate that quantity to be the usual flow. It is obviously a mere estimate of the minimum. It proceeds to adjudicate that it means all that the creek will carry when the surface is as high as the floor of the head gate, with the creek there 30 feet wide and 47 inches below said floor, whether more or less than 5,000 inches. Counsel express a fear that the judgment may be so interpreted hereafter by the court below as to give the defendants greater rights than it gives as we construe it. The construction given to a judgment of the lower court by this court, in determining an appeal therefrom, constitutes the law of the case, and is binding on the lower court in all subsequent proceedings and whenever its interpretation is material.

[14, 15] Appellants also quote statements from an affidavit used in the court below only upon a motion for a new trial, and they present a map which is not in the record at all, all of which as they claim tends to show that the findings as to the width, depth, and carrying capacity of the creek under the level of the head gate, are incorrect, and that it will in fact carry much less than 5,000 inches and less than it would carry if the stated widths and elevations were correct. The map cannot be considered for any purpose. The affidavit cannot be considered in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

Under all the circumstances, we do not think any modification of the judgment is necessary to protect the plaintiffs in the rights which are awarded to them therein.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

163 Cal. 658

ANDERSON v. QUICK. (S. F. 5,889.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 5, 1912.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 303*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS —RECOVERY BY CONTRACTOR—WRONGFUL
PREVENTION OF PERFORMANCE.

Where a contractor had proceeded with the erection of a building no further than the point at which he was entitled by his contract to a first payment, he could not recover additional payments from the owner without showing that such owner had wrongfully prevented further performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1409-1443; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 303*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS —RECOVERY BY CONTRACTOR—WRONGFUL
PREVENTION OF PERFORMANCE.

A building contract provided for the proportion of loss which should be borne by the contractor and owner in case of a partial or total destruction of the building by fire, earthquake, etc., but contained no provision that an adjustment of the loss should be necessary before the contractor should further proceed with the building. Held, as it is not necessary to the purpose of the agreement that such a provision be read into the contract, a failure of the owner to provide for an adjustment of the loss after destruction of the building by an earthquake pending its construction would not wrongfully prevent further performance, and entitle the builder to payment outside of the terms of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1409-1443; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 580*)—BUILDING CONTRACTS —DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY—RIGHT OF CONTRACTOR TO SHARE IN PROCEEDS OF OWNER'S INSURANCE.

A contractor engaged in the building of a house destroyed by fire and earthquake cannot share in the proceeds of insurance taken out by the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1439-1443; Dec. Dig. § 580.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. J. Lennon and J. J. Van Nostrand, Judges.

Action by W. B. Anderson against Mary A. P. Quick, administratrix of the estate of J. W. Quick. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ames & Manning, of San Francisco, for appellant. Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. On November 3, 1905, the parties entered into a contract whereby the plaintiff, as contractor, agreed to construct for the defendant, as owner, a seven-story brick building upon a lot fronting on Seventh street, in the city and county of San Francisco. The contract price was $45,927, payable in installments, as the work progressed.

Construction was commenced, and continued until April 18, 1906, when the earthquake and fire which occurred on that day partially destroyed the work done and the materials furnished by plaintiff under the contract. There had then been paid to plaintiff the first installment, amounting to $3,049. No further payment had become due. Work was never thereafter resumed under the contract.

In this action, brought to recover damages, the plaintiff, after setting forth the provisions of the contract, alleged that he had up to April 18, 1906, expended $14,694.55 for work and materials furnished, that after April 18, 1906, he was ready, able, and willing to proceed with the performance of his contract, but that defendant refused to permit him to so proceed, and prevented him from performing any of the work required to be performed by him under the terms of said contract. Damage in the sum of $14,694.55, together with the further sum of $6,500 for loss of profits, is alleged to have resulted. The answer denied all of these allegations except those relating to the making of the contract and its terms. The court found that, in the performance of work under the contract, the plaintiff had expended $13,279.43. It found that after the 18th day of April, 1906, the plaintiff was not ready, or able, or willing to proceed with the performance of the work or the furnishing of materials under the contract; that defendant did not refuse to permit him to proceed, nor did the defendant prevent the plaintiff from performing his contract. There is also a finding that plaintiff has not been damaged in any sum. Judgment in favor of the defendant followed. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] In order to overthrow the judgment, the appellant attacks, as unsupported by the evidence, the findings that defendant did not refuse to permit him to proceed, and did not prevent him from performing. Unless this attack be well founded, the plaintiff obviously can have no right of recovery. The contract for the construction of the building provided that payments should be made only when specified portions of the work had been done. Inasmuch as the plaintiff had not performed to a point entitling him to receive more than the first payment (which he had in fact received), he could claim nothing additional without showing that the defendant had wrongfully prevented further performance.

[2] On the issue of prevention, the record unquestionably contains evidence sufficient to support the finding of the court, unless the appellant be right in the construction which he seeks to put upon section "Twelfth" of the contract. That paragraph reads as follows: "Twelfth. In case said work herein provided for should before completion, be wholly destroyed by fire, defective soil, earthquake or other act of God which the contractor could not have reasonably foreseen and provided for, then the loss occasioned thereby shall be sustained by the owner to the extent that he has paid installments thereon, or that may be due under the fifth clause of this contract; and the loss occasioned thereby and to be sustained by the contractor, shall be for the uncompleted portion of said work upon which he may be engaged at the time of the loss, and for which no payment is yet due under said fifth clause of this contract."

"In the event of a partial destruction of said work by any of the causes above named, then the loss to be sustained by the owner shall be in the proportion that the amounts of installments paid or due bears to the total amount of work done and materials furnished, estimated according to said contract price, and the balance of said loss to be sustained by the contractor."

It appears that on July 24, 1906, the plaintiff addressed to the defendant a letter in which, after calling attention to the last paragraph of the section just quoted, he requested the defendant to fix a time before August 1, 1906, when he, the plaintiff, might meet the said defendant, "and adjust the losses on this building, as provided in the foregoing paragraph of the contract." No time for such meeting was fixed by the defendant.

The contention of the appellant is that, under the second paragraph of section "Twelfth," it became incumbent upon the parties, before further work could proceed, to meet and agree upon the extent of the injury to the building and the loss occasioned thereby. Since plaintiff sought to bring about such meeting, and the defendant did not comply with his request to fix a time, the said defendant, it is argued, thereby made it impossible for the plaintiff to go on with the construction of the building. But the difficulty with this argument is that it requires us to read into the agreement a provision which is not contained therein, either in express language or by necessary implication. The twelfth clause certainly does not declare in terms that the parties shall agree upon the amount of the loss to be borne by the owner and the contractor, respectively, in the event of a total or partial destruction of the work before completion. All that it does is to provide the basis upon which the loss shall be apportioned. It must be conceded that a term or condition, although not expressed in a contract, may be implied, but this will be done only where the implication is necessary in order to effect the purpose and intent of the agreement. We see no reason why a prior adjustment of the loss was necessary to enable the contractor to proceed. The plaintiff was at perfect liberty to go on without such adjustment. Upon reaching a point where a payment was due him, he could have demanded of the defendant such amount as he could show to be due under the contract.

The two paragraphs of section "Twelfth," both relating to the subject of destruction of work done, are to be read together. It is not claimed that the first paragraph contemplates the adjustment of loss before proceeding, nor, a fortiori, the payment by the owner to the contractor of the proportion of the loss chargeable to him. The owner is to sustain a part of the loss, and this he does when, upon the restoration of the building to a point where an installment becomes due, he is required to make duplicate payment of an installment already paid, or due and unpaid before the loss. There is no necessity for interpolating into the first paragraph any condition requiring adjustment or payment of loss before proceeding, and the second paragraph contains nothing which would require or justify a different construction.

[3] What we have said disposes of all the points made by appellant, with the exception of the suggestion that the result of the judgment appealed from is to make the defendant an actual gainer by reason of the partial destruction of the work. In so far as this conclusion rests upon the fact that the defendant collected insurance money, it may be said that this is a matter wholly between the defendant and the insurers, and in no way a concern of the plaintiff. The plaintiff could have protected his interest by insurance. Not having done so, he is not entitled to share in the proceeds of the insurance taken out by the owner.

If defendant benefited by the salvage on the building, such benefit came to him solely because the plaintiff failed to go on with the performance of his contract. Furthermore, there was no issue on this point, and we cannot know whether, in fact, the loss which defendant may have sustained through plaintiff's failure to complete his contract did not exceed the supposed gain in salvage.

In any aspect, the plaintiff, having failed to establish the necessary allegation that performance by him was prevented by the act of the defendant, cannot recover.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

163 Cal. 663

BURR v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 5,865.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 5, 1912.)

1. TRIAL (§ 142*)—NONSUIT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Nonsuit should not be granted when there is any substantial evidence which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to plaintiff, would support a verdict or finding that the material allegations of the complaint are true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 337; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 136*) — QUESTION FOR COURT OR JURY.

Negligence is a question for the jury, though there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions on the subject can be drawn from the evidence; and is a question of law for the court only when but one conclusion from the evidence could be reached by a reasonable and impartial man.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 277-353; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 117*)—COLLISION OF CAR WITH AUTOMOBILE—NEGLECT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that at a street crossing, where an automobile attempting to get across the tracks of the street railroad was struck by a street car, the track and roadway were undergoing repair; that the car was running 25 miles an hour; that the motorman saw the automobile on the track; that, though it was in motion, it was moving first forward and then back; and that the motorman came on without slackening speed till he was on the automobile—is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of his negligent speed, even if he did not see the automobile, and of his negligence in not reducing speed if he did see it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 239-257; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

4. PARTIES (§ 75*)—AMENDMENT—DISCRETION.

It is in the discretion of the court to allow defendant during the trial to amend his answer to set up an alleged defect of parties plaintiff; the facts relating thereto not coming to defendant's knowledge till the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 115, 116; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 264*)—NONSUIT—HEARING—GROUNDS.

The filing of amendment to the answer, with permission of court, setting up a defect of parties plaintiff, in that the action was for injury to an article not belonging to plaintiff, but to a firm of which he was a member, raises an issue on which defendant may rely in its motion for nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 803-805; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—EVIDENCE—ERROR IN ADMISSION—CURE BY AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Filing amendment to the answer, with permission of the court, setting up that the article, injury to which was sued for, belonged not to plaintiff, but to a firm of which he was a member, cured any prior error in admitting evidence that it belonged to the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4171-4177; Dec. Dig. § 1052.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 143*) — NONSUIT — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Nonsuit on the ground of defect in parties, in that the article, injury to which was sued for, belonged, not to plaintiff, but to a firm of which he was a member, should not be granted; the evidence on such issue being in conflict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 342, 343; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Percy L. Burr against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From a judgment of nonsuit and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Humphrey & Hubbard and William P. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, for appellant. A. A. Moore and Stanley Moore, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. In this action, brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent destruction by defendant of plaintiff's automobile, the court at the close of plaintiff's case, granted a nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

One of the grounds upon which a nonsuit was asked was "that no negligence has been shown, actionable or otherwise." The evidence offered by plaintiff tended to show that at a point on the "Mission road," a street of the city and county of San Francisco, the defendant, a street railroad corporation, was repairing its track. The roadbed had been torn up for some distance, and there was a temporary crossing over the tracks for vehicles. On the evening of November 8, 1907, at about 7 o'clock, the plaintiff was riding northerly over the Mission road in his automobile. The plaintiff says that it was dusk, although the time stated by him was about two hours after sunset. On coming to the place where the temporary crossing was, he attempted to cross the defendant's tracks. One of the front wheels of his automobile struck a rail which protruded for some three inches above the surface of the ground. The rail caused the wheel to slip or "skid" sidewise, and the automobile failed to get across. Plaintiff made several attempts to get his machine over the track, but each time failed, the machine facing more and more in a direction parallel with the track and toward the north. While the automobile was in this position, it was struck by one of defendant's cars, which was traveling southerly at a rate, as plaintiff testifies, of 25 miles per hour. The automobile was lighted, as was defendant's car. While the car was approaching, and when it was about a block away, the plaintiff gave "what is generally known as a railroad stop signal"; that is to say, he stood up and threw down his hands. He did not sound his horn. The engine of his automobile was in motion until the collision, and the automobile itself was moving forward or back during the entire time, except for a brief interval. The plaintiff judged that the motorman saw him "from the fact of his furious whistling." The motorman could have stopped when he first saw the plaintiff.

[1, 2] On this testimony, we think the issue of negligence should have been submitted to the jury. It is elementary that a motion for nonsuit is not to be granted where there is any substantial evidence which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to the plaintiff, would support a verdict or finding that the material allegations of the complaint are true. Equally well settled is the rule that "negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be drawn from the evidence." Wahlgren v. Market St. R. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 663, 62 Pac. 308, 64 Pac. 993; Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos R. Co., 156 Cal. 379, 104 Pac. 956. It is only where the evidence is such that but one conclusion with respect to negligence could be reached by a reasonable and impartial man that the question becomes one of law for the court.

[3] In the absence of an ordinance or a law limiting the rate of speed at which cars may travel, no particular rate may be said to be negligent per se. But, in any case, the circumstances may be such as to authorize the jury to determine that, under the circumstances shown, the speed employed was excessive. Here there is testimony that the defendant's car was being run over a street at the rate of 25 miles an hour. It was approaching a point at which the track and roadway were undergoing repair, and where vehicles, properly upon the street, were, or might be, required to cross the track. The testimony justified the inference that the motorman saw the plaintiff's automobile upon the track, but that, notwithstanding, he came on without slackening his speed until he was actually upon the automobile. While plaintiff's machine was in motion during most of the time of the approach of the car, it was not moving in any one direction, but was going first forward, then back. It seems clear to us that the jury might reasonably have inferred that an ordinarily prudent man, operating a street car thus approaching this crossing, would, whether he saw only one on the crossing or not, have run at a speed enabling him, in case of need, to bring his car to a stop in a shorter space of time, or else that he would, upon seeing an automobile moving upon the track in the erratic manner described, have realized the danger of a collision and reduced his speed until he could ascertain whether the automobile would be able to get clear. So inferring, they might properly conclude that the collision was the direct result of the motorman's want of due care in operating his car in the way he did. Certainly it cannot be said that every reasonable man would be bound to conclude, on the facts shown, that the collision was not caused by excessive speed of the car, or by the failure of the motorman to slow down as soon as he should have. If this be so, the plaintiff was entitled to have the question of negligence submitted to the jury.

[4-6] The only other ground now urged in support of the order granting the nonsuit is that the evidence shows that the automobile was the property of a partnership composed of plaintiff and one Willett, and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to maintain this action individually. The appellant objects to any consideration of this ground, for the reason that the original answer of the defendant failed to set up the alleged defect of parties plaintiff. But the court during the trial permitted the defendant to amend its answer by adding this plea. The facts relating to the defense did not come to the knowledge of the defendant until the trial, and it cannot be held that the court abused its discretion in permitting the amendment. Under our practice, great liberality is to be exercised in allowing amendments to pleadings. The filing, with the sanction of the court, of the amendment, raised an issue upon which defendant was entitled to rely in its motion for nonsuit. It also cured any error that might have been theretofore committed in admitting evidence tending to show that the ownership of the automobile was in the partnership.

[7] But, even though the defense of defect of parties plaintiff was properly before the court, it could not justify an order of nonsuit unless the evidence plainly established the truth of the plea. The most that can be said is that the evidence on the point is conflicting. There is testimony tending to show that the automobile was purchased and owned by the partnership. On the other hand, testimony was introduced tending to show that the automobile was the individual property of Burr, the plaintiff. The conflict, then, was one of fact to be resolved by the jury, and not to be determined by the court as matter of law on motion for nonsuit.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

163 Cal. 668

Ex parte RUSSELL. (Cr. 1,733.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 11, 1912.)1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 16*) — AMENDMENTS—CONSTRUCTION.

The court, in applying and interpreting an amendment to the Constitution, must consider the conditions existing prior to its adoption to ascertain the objects and purposes of the amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 16; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 56*)—POWERS—RIGHT TO ACQUIRE AND OPERATE PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Prior to Const. art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1911 (see Laws 1911, p. 2180), a municipal corporation, unless specially authorized by its charter, had no authority to construct or operate public utilities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 661*)—POWERS—RIGHT TO ACQUIRE AND OPERATE PUBLIC UTILITIES—"CONDITIONS"—"REGULATIONS."

Const. art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1911 (see Laws 1911, p. 2180), authorizing any municipal corporation to establish and operate enumerated public utilities, and providing that persons or corporations may establish and operate such works under "such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof," grants to all municipalities the power to construct and operate public utilities, and to prescribe the conditions on which persons and corporations may establish and operate such works, subject to charter provisions; and an ordinance of a city empowered to regulate conduits and works for the production and distribution of gas, etc., which prohibits excavations in streets without first obtaining permission from the board of public works, is valid when applied to one engaged in laying a gas pipe in a street as a part of the distributing system of a corporation engaged in supplying gas to the inhabitants of the city; the word "condition" meaning something established as a requisite to the doing or taking effect of something else, while the word "regulations" is something distinct from the word "conditions," and implies a broader meaning in the latter word than mere regulation of the manner of use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1432, 1434-1437; Dec. Dig. § 661.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1394-1400; vol. 7, pp. 6049-6051.]

4. GAS (§ 7*)—FRANCHISES—ACCEPTANCE.

The grant in Const. art. 11, § 19, declaring, prior to the amendment of 1911, that a corporation organized to supply any city with light shall have the privilege of using public streets and of laying pipes necessary for introducing into and supplying the city and its inhabitants with light, is a general offer to all corporations that may be organized for the purpose, but is specific as to the privilege offered by limiting the use of the public streets, and the grant of the use of the streets is effective only when actually used; and a city may at any time prescribe conditions under which extensions may be made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. FRANCHISES (§ 2*) — STATUTES (§ 238*)—GRANTS OF FRANCHISES—CONSTRUCTION.

Grants made by the Constitution or statutes to private persons or public service corporations of rights belonging to the state or to the public must be construed most strongly in favor of the public; and only that which is granted in clear and explicit terms passes by the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Franchises, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.* Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 319; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus by Robert Russell against Charles E. Sebastian, Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles, for the discharge of the applicant from custody on a charge of having violated an ordinance of the city. Denied, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, Trippet, Chapman & Biby, H. H. Trowbridge, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and O'Melveny, Stevens & Milliken, all of Los Angeles, and Guy C. Earl, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Guy Eddie, City Pros., of Los Angeles, John W. Shenk, City Atty., of Los Angeles, Wm. J. Carr, City Atty., of Pasadena, and Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Thos. E. Haven, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioner alleges that he is in custody upon a charge of having violated an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles.

The ordinance referred to was approved by the mayor on February 21, 1912. It declares that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to make any excavation in a street, for any purpose, without first obtaining permission in writing from the board of public works; and that before issuing the permit the board must require the applicant therefor to state the purpose for which the excavation is to be made, and show legal authority to occupy and use the street for that purpose. A violation of any provision of the ordinance is declared to be a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

Another ordinance, approved October 26, 1911, provides that no person, firm, or corporation shall exercise any franchise or privilege to lay or maintain pipes or conduits in or under any street of the city for the transmission of gas, water, heat, steam, or other substance without having first obtained a grant therefor from the city in accordance with the city charter and said ordinance, unless such person, firm, or corporation is entitled to do so "by direct and unlimited authority of the Constitution of the state of California, or of the Constitution and laws of the United States."

On the 10th of October, 1911, section 19 of article 11 of the state Constitution was amended. The city council passed these ordinances in the belief that by this amendment the city was given authority to forbid the use of public streets by public service corporations, unless the city should have first granted a franchise permitting such use. The petitioner was engaged in laying a gas pipe in the street as a part of the distributing system of a corporation engaged in supplying gas to the inhabitants of the city, known as the Economic Gas Company. He claims, first, that the gas company is directly authorized by said amendment to lay gas mains in the streets as part of its works for supplying gas, and hence that the city cannot forbid it from so doing; and, second, that because of the fact that it had established its works, laid some mains, and began supplying gas before the adoption of the amendment, it had a vested right to extend its mains and lay them in streets not before used by it for that purpose—a right which the city could not restrict by ordinance, nor the people take away by constitutional amendment. These claims present the questions herein to be considered. We will take them up in the order stated.

1. Section 19, art. 11, as amended, is as follows: "Any municipal corporation may establish and operate public works for supplying its inhabitants with light, water, power, heat, transportation, telephone service or other means of communication. Such works may be acquired by original construction or by the purchase of existing works, including their franchises, or both. Persons or corporations may establish and operate works for supplying the inhabitants with such services upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof. A municipal corporation may furnish such services to inhabitants outside its boundaries, provided that it shall not furnish any service to the inhabitants of any other municipality owning or operating works supplying the same service to such inhabitants, without the consent of such other municipality, expressed by ordinance." Laws 1911, p. 2180.

[1, 2] The first step in the application and interpretation of an amendment to a Constitution or statute is to consider the conditions existing prior to its adoption, so as to ascertain its objects and purposes. At the time this amendment was adopted, municipal corporations, unless specially authorized by charter, were without power to make or operate the several public utilities mentioned in the amended section. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 105 Cal. 157, 38 Pac. 682; Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41; Platt v. San Francisco, 158 Cal. 82, 110 Pac. 304. Natural persons had full liberty to do so, and private corporations could secure the power by filing the proper articles of incorporation. There had apparently arisen a general opinion among the people that municipal ownership and operation of such public utilities was desirable.

[3] Considering the language of the amendment in the light of these circumstances, its effect is plain. It is one of the evidences of a prevailing sentiment in favor of such municipal activities. It first makes to all municipal corporations a direct grant of power to make and operate public works of the kinds enumerated. As to works of like kind to be operated privately, the design was to place them all in control of the municipality. Following out this design, the succeeding provision expressly limits the pre-existing powers and rights available to private corporations and natural persons. They are permitted to engage in such enterprises within the city only "upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe."

The use of the word "regulations" as something distinct from "conditions" implies a broader meaning in the latter word than mere regulation of the manner of use. In ordinary use, in this connection, the word "condition" means something established "as a requisite to the doing or taking effect of something else." Webster's Dict. In law, it means "a qualification, restriction or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected," or defeating, terminating, or enlarging an estate granted. 1 Bouv. Dict. 382. The conditions and regulations are to be such as the city "may prescribe under its organic law." There is no other qualification of the words. The conditions prescribed may therefore include every kind, conditions precedent, as well as conditions subsequent, if they may be made under the city charter. The charter of Los Angeles gives the city power to prescribe the character and quality of any public utility service, to fix the rate of compensation therefor, to regulate conduits and works or plants for the production, transmission, and distribution of gas, and to grant franchises or privileges in, on, across, under, or over the streets, and prescribe the terms thereof. If the taking effect of this constitutional provision in any city depends on the existence of provisions in its organic law giving the city power to make conditions, then these provisions of the Los Angeles charter give that city power to prescribe the conditions expressed in the ordinances above mentioned. But we think the provision itself, by necessary implication, gives each city power to prescribe conditions.

To give the city power to prescribe the conditions upon which persons and corporations may establish and operate such works is to place the entire subject-matter within the control of the city, and, in effect, to provide that no such person or corporation may do so without obtaining the privilege from the city by a grant specifying the conditions it chooses to prescribe. With respect to the mode of imposing and enforcing the conditions, the city is, of course, bound by the provisions of its charter. If conditions are found in the charter itself, the legislative authority of the city will be bound thereby and could not impose inconsistent conditions, nor abrogate those of the charter. In such a case the city would be imposing the conditions by its organic law, and all grants by the city legislative body would be required to conform thereto. We need not here determine whether, in the absence of anything in the charter or city ordinances forbidding it, such persons or corporations, under their general powers, could go on to establish and operate such works without asking the consent of the city, or whether such action would be unlawful without affirmative permission from the city. It is sufficient for the disposition of this case to say that, where the city has prescribed conditions, they must be observed, or the construction and operation of such works will be unlawful.

It is argued that this gives the city power to refuse to grant such franchises, and that this would allow the city to create monopolies by limiting such grants to a single person or corporation; that this would be against public policy; and hence that this construction is not permissible. Opinions are variant upon the question whether, in the case of public utilities in cities, monopolies are, or are not, detrimental to the general good. In 1885, when section 19, as it stood prior to October 10, 1911, was adopted, the general opinion doubtless was against such monopolies. Subsequent experience of the effects of competition seems to have changed that opinion. This is clearly indicated in the statement in favor of this amendment printed on the ballots by which it was adopted. It declares that such utilities are by nature monopolistic. Its adoption upon such a statement of reasons is strong evidence of a change of public sentiment on the question. The general opinion now seems to be that where municipal ownership is not feasible or attainable a properly regulated monopoly is advisable. The amendment shows an intention to allow this policy to be determined by each city in its own behalf. It may establish works of its own, excluding all others; it may permit but one system of works by refusing more than one franchise; or it may encourage competition by allowing rival companies to enter the field, either in competition with its own system, or with those of others. We refer here to new systems, not to systems in operation prior to the amendment.

A consideration of the entire section in connection with all classes of public utilities mentioned therein shows that no other interpretation would be reasonable. It applies throughout to works for supplying the city with light, water, power, heat, with transportation of freight or passengers, and with telephone service or other means of communication. The claim of the petitioner is, in effect, that the third clause gives directly to every person or corporation desiring to establish and operate works of any of the kinds above mentioned the right to enter upon the streets of the city to establish and operate its system of works, regardless of the wish or will of the city authorities; and that the power of the city to prescribe conditions is confined to such conditions as relate merely to the manner of establishing and operating the systems. If this is the effect of the clause, then the amendment greatly enlarges, instead of restricting, the privileges given directly to private persons and corporations in the streets. Formerly the right to use them extended only to water and lighting systems; now, if this claim is correct, the right vests in all persons and all corporations for the purposes mentioned. The right could be exercised after the city had established its own works, as well as before. It would be unlimited with respect to the number of rival establishments. New street car lines could parallel existing lines, not only upon different streets, but upon the same streets, if there was space for another track. The city could only make conditions as to the manner of laying the track and operating the cars; and it would be a necessary qualification that the conditions must be reasonable, and not of a character which would prevent the use or unreasonably restrict it. To give the amendment this meaning would make it almost the direct opposite of what it has been generally supposed to be. It is apparent, of course, that the language is not as clear to the contrary as it could be made, in view of the claim here presented. But it is reasonably susceptible of the interpretation we have given it; and we are satisfied that this construction is consistent with and in furtherance of its general intent and policy.

We have high authority to the same effect. In Pomona v. Sunset, etc., Co., 224 U. S. 330, 32 Sup. Ct. 477, 56 L. Ed. 788, decided April 8, 1912, this provision was construed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The claim was substantially the same as that here made. It was urged that this provision constituted a grant to the telephone company of the right to use the streets of Pomona as a place on which to erect its poles and string its wires. That court dismissed the claim with this statement: "If the municipal corporation does not see fit to establish the public works itself, it may let others do it; but its power to impose conditions excludes the notion that the Constitution alone is a grant to others of a right to occupy the streets without its consent."

The ordinances are therefore valid and enforceable against the gas company and the petitioner, as its employé, unless the claim that it has a vested right to extend its pipes is well taken. This brings us to the second question.

[4] 2. As a foundation for the second proposition, the petitioner shows that the works of said company were established and operated with the intent to supply gas in every section of the city, and to lay pipes in every street, if necessary for that purpose; that to this end it constructed works of a size sufficient to supply gas to a much larger territory than it was supplying prior to October 10, 1911, and had expended in so doing $100,000 more than would have been required for works to supply only the territory reached by its pipes at that date; that it had laid and maintained its pipes in many streets of the city, and had supplied gas thereby to the inhabitants in such streets for more than two years before said date; that prior to said date said company had made contracts with many of the inhabitants of the city to supply gas to them; that said contracts were still in force; and that, in order to perform them, it must extend its mains into streets not before used by it. All its works before that date were constructed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution existing prior to said amendment, and in compliance with the existing regulations and directions of the city authorities. The petitioner was excavating a trench to lay gas pipes for said company in a street not before occupied or used by it for that purpose.

Prior to October 10, 1911, section 19 of article 11 was as follows: "In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose, under and by authority of the laws of this state, shall, under the direction of the superintendent of streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe, for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate use charges thereof."

The grant or offer set forth in this section is in the most general terms. It is not specific with respect to either places or persons. It is not made to a particular corporation; nor is it confined to any particular city. It is a general offer to any person and all corporations that may be organized for that purpose, and it embraces all cities in the state.

It is specific only with regard to the kind of privilege offered, to wit, that of "using the public streets" and "laying down pipes and conduits therein, * * * so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying said city and its inhabitants" with gas or water. No provision is made for any formal or written acceptance of the offer, whereby a conveyance of a right to specified streets, or within specified limits, or to all the streets of the particular city, might be manifested, which would be in the nature of a conveyance vesting the right in advance of, and regardless of, its use. No officer is empowered to take, receive, record, or preserve such acceptance. The only means whereby an effectual manifestation of acceptance can be made is the act of taking possession and occupying the street for the purpose allowed. Then, and not before, is the acceptance complete. Thus far the public grant extends; thus far the public property in the street is burdened and diverted to another use; thus far the grant is accomplished. There is nothing in the language of the section which can be fairly said to express the intention that the right offered should take effect in any street before it is actually used, or should vest as to all of them the moment that the use is begun in good faith in one.

[5] It is an established principle of construction, applicable to Constitutions as well as to statutes, that grants thereby made to private persons or public service corporations of rights belonging to the state or to the public "are to be construed most strongly in favor of the public." Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 39, 116 Pac. 725; Sunset, etc., Co. v. Pasadena, 161 Cal. 273, 118 Pac. 799. "Only that which is granted in clear and explicit terms passes" by such grant. "Nothing passes by implication." Knoxville v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 33, 26 Sup. Ct. 224, 50 L. Ed. 353. The grant to be made effective by actual use and acceptance of the constitutional offer is not, under the rule of construction just stated, to be carried further by implication. It is a necessary conclusion, therefore, that the vested right of the Economic Gas Company in the streets of Los Angeles at the time the Constitution was changed extended so far only as its actual occupancy and use of the streets then extended. The people had the right, at any time before acceptance, to repeal the provision and withdraw the offer. The investment of money in gas works designed to supply additional territory was not an acceptance, and could not operate as an estoppel against the state or the people to divest them of their sovereign authority to change the Constitution. The company must be deemed to have had knowledge of this sovereign power, and to have assumed the risk that the power might be exercised before it had further availed itself of the existing offer.

The section has heretofore been considered, in some of its aspects, by this court. In People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209, its effect as an executed and completed grant of the right to lay pipes in the public streets was the question involved. It was held that no legislative action was necessary to give it force; that it constituted a direct grant from the people, through the Constitution, to the corporation in charge of the public use of supplying gas or water of the privilege of laying in the streets such pipes as were required to distribute the supply. The main question considered was that of the necessity of legislative action to put the constitutional provision in force. In Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973, it was decided that this constitutional grant gave to the corporation desiring to accept it the privilege granted, free from any interference or supervision by the municipality, other than that authorized by the terms of the section; and hence that the city could not require such corporation to procure a permit as a condition precedent to such use of the streets. See, also, South Pasadena v. Pasadena, 152 Cal. 586, 93 Pac. 490. In Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511, the decision was that this franchise or privilege, when accepted and used, is an incorporeal hereditament, an easement in the particular street and partaking of the realty, local in situation and taxable in the county in which the street is situated, the same as other real property; and that it is not one of, or a part of, the general corporate franchises to do business upon which corporations are taxable only in the county in which the principal place of business is situated. In none of these cases was it necessary to consider the extent of the franchise acquired by acceptance of the constitutional offer; that is to say, whether it was acquired and became vested only as far as it was used at the particular time to which the inquiry related, or whether it was a general present grant of a right or estate in all the streets to which the proposed system was designed to extend, and which vested as to all of them the moment it was accepted and used in one. There are expressions, however, in several of the decisions which show that the understanding of the court has been that the acceptance did not become complete otherwise than by actual use, nor extend further than such use; and that the right vested at the time of such use, and not before. In Stockton v. San Joaquin Co., supra, 148 Cal. 318, 83 Pac. 56 (5 L. R. A. [N. S.] 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511), speaking of such a franchise we said: "It is only acquired when the constitutional grant is actually accepted; when the pipes and conduits for gas or the electric poles are laid in or erected on the streets of the city." Corporations having the capacity to take "do not acquire it until they have accepted it by proceeding to its actual exercise." Such franchise "is indissolubly annexed to the street of a city in and upon which it is exercised." In South Pasadena v. Pasadena, supra, we said: "This right, when made available by actual possession and use, is a species of real property, appropriately designated as a franchise." The point decided in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 111-122, 123, 116 Pac. 559-564, is, in principle, decisive of the precise question here involved. Referring there to the similar legislative grant to telegraph companies to construct telegraph lines along the highways of the state, contained in section 536 of the Civil Code, the court says it is similar to the constitutional provision in question here, and that it "would vest only when actually accepted by the exercise of the right granted;" that "the exclusive occupation by a company of portions of public highways for the authorized purpose is an acceptance by it of the offered franchise;" that the statute was a grant of rights in streets "which, to the extent that they were accepted and availed of by any company, constitute a franchise granted by the state and accepted by the company." And again: "To the extent that the offer of the state contained in the section was accepted by a telegraph company by the actual occupation of a highway prior to any repeal, modification, or suspension of the section, no right of revocation having been reserved, such telegraph company has vested rights that cannot be taken away by the state or city without compensation." And further: "So far as any company had not at such time availed itself of and thus accepted the provisions of section 536, there was no 'existing' grant or franchise to be annulled; and there was never any 'special' or 'exclusive' privilege given by the section." The part of the decision last quoted relates directly to the question whether the telegraph company, under the general legislative grant to all companies in any street, acquired any right in the streets in which it had not erected poles or strung wires prior to a repeal of the section, which such repeal would divest. It is practically the same question as that presented here, and is authority for the proposition that the gas company had no vested rights in streets not previously used for the laying of gas mains. To the same effect are St. Louis v. W. U. Telegraph Co., 149 U. S. 465, 13 Sup. Ct. 990, 37 L. Ed. 810, Northwest, etc., Co. v. St. Charles (C. C.), 154 Fed. 388, and Muskogee, etc., Co. v. Hall, 4 Ind. T. 18, 64 S. W. 603. There are cases involving grants of franchises in streets of a particular city to a particular person or corporation, which hold that a right vests in all streets as soon as the franchise is accepted, and that such acceptance may be manifested either by a formal written acceptance, or by the actual exercise of the rights granted thereby. We do not consider these decisions authority upon the question here involved. The distinction between such a special grant of a described right and the general offer here involved is obvious.

For these reasons, we are of the opinion that the Economic Gas Company had no vested right to excavate in the new street, or to lay pipes therein to extend its service into new territory within the city.

The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 690

LYNCH v. KEYSTONE CONSOL. MINING CO. (S. F. 5,881.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 18, 1912. Rehearing Denied Oct. 18, 1912.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 166*) — CONTRACTS FOR COMPENSATION — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to recover money due for services rendered a mining corporation and payable out of the proceeds or net profits of a mine, evidence held insufficient to show unreasonable delay in payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 368-372; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 143*)—COMPENSATION—SOURCE.

A party to a contract for his services may validly agree that he shall be paid from a certain source, as where one rendering services to a corporation agrees that he shall be paid only from proceeds or profits of a mine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 328-331; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 144*) — CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract reciting an indebtedness to an attorney for services, and a promise to pay him out of the proceeds of any sale of a mine, and, if no sale should be made, out of the net profits of the mine, not exceeding 10 per cent. of such profits monthly, limits the sources from which the attorney can compel payment to such proceeds or profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Edward Lynch against the Keystone Consolidated Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Geo. C. Sargent, F. H. Gould, and Vincent Surr, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Edward Lynch and Bertin A. Weyl, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action instituted by plaintiff on December 22, 1905, against appellant corporation and M. J. McDonald, to recover $20,300 alleged to be due plaintiff on a written contract. The findings and decision were in favor of plaintiff as against appellant, and in favor of defendant McDonald. Judgment was accordingly given awarding plaintiff as against the corporation the sum of $20,300, with interest, and dismissing the action as to McDonald. On an appeal taken by plaintiff from the judgment of dismissal as to McDonald, such judgment was affirmed; the conclusion being that McDonald never signed or executed such contract in any other capacity than as an officer of appellant corporation. Lynch v. McDonald, 155 Cal. 704, 102 Pac. 918. This is an appeal by the defendant corporation from the judgment against it and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The contract was one bearing date March 1, 1901, and in form was one between appellant corporation and M. J. McDonald as parties of the first part, and plaintiff as party of the second part, but it was signed by McDonald only in his capacity as president of the appellant corporation. It recited that the corporation was the owner of a certain group of mines; that McDonald was the owner of nearly all the capital stock of said corporation; that plaintiff had since May 26, 1892, rendered the corporation services as attorney in various legal proceedings and also by the discovery and development of very valuable ore deposits in its mines, and had facilitated the operation of its mines by an arrangement and condensation of mining records, maps, surveys, and compilations of surveys and maps; and that "it is the intention of the parties hereto to satisfy and adjust the compensation of said Lynch for the performance of said services." It then proceeded as follows: "Now, therefore, the parties of the first part for themselves and for and on behalf of said corporation, do hereby acknowledge themselves indebted to said Lynch in the sum of $20,000 over and above the sum of $409.95 advanced to said Lynch on his notes given to said corporation (the payment of which notes and said $409.95 is hereby acknowledged), and whereas, it is not convenient for the parties of the first part to pay said sum of $20,000 at this time, and, whereas, they intend to sell the whole or a large portion of said mining property of said corporation, or of the capital stock thereof, as soon as possible, and they desire and intend to pay said sum to said Lynch out of the proceeds of such sale, or otherwise, as hereinafter provided: It is therefore agreed, that out of the proceeds of such sale the parties of the first part shall pay to the party of the second part said sum of $20,000 as in full compensation of the past services of said Lynch as aforesaid: Provided, that, whereas, a new mill and shaft equipment of said mine is now being planned and provided for, and whereas, said mine or said stock may not be sold as soon as is now anticipated, and whereas, the relations of the parties hereto are friendly and confidential, and it is the wish and desire of each to aid and assist the other in every way: Now, in case said sale is not effected as aforesaid by August 1st, 1902, then provisions shall be made for the payment of said $20,000 to said Lynch out of the monthly proceeds of the mine, not to exceed ten per cent. of the net profits of the mine."

It was then further provided that as the parties of the first part desired the future services of Lynch in prosecuting and defending any litigation pending or which might arise, and generally in doing any and all things which he was able to do, Lynch should render all such services for three years at $150 per month until August 1, 1902, said compensation to be then increased if the profits of the mine warranted it; "it being understood and agreed that the amount $150 per month, so to be paid to said Lynch, is measured by the present ability of the parties of the first part to pay rather than by the amount which is earned by said Lynch, and said monthly payment shall be made and accepted in full of said services and in consideration of the desire of the parties of the first part to afford said Lynch an income from said mine in lieu of and instead of interest on said indebtedness, and said payments provided for herein are additional to those provided for by an agreement of even date herewith, made between said McDonald and said Lynch." The provision as to the $150 per month was continued in force by later agreements, the last of which was dated September 27, 1904. On or about April 25, 1901, the contract, executed in duplicate, was signed by plaintiff, and by McDonald as follows: "Keystone Consolidated Mining Company by M. J. McDonald, President"—and at McDonald's instance by appellant's secretary as follows: "By Charles F. Anderson, secretary"—the latter affixing the corporate seal, and McDonald then delivered to plaintiff one of the duplicate contracts.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Under the terms of this contract, appellant has paid to plaintiff $150 per month for each month from March 1, 1901, to and including May, 1905, but has failed to make any payment for either June or July, 1905, although he performed the stipulated service throughout June and until July 20, 1905, when he was notified that his services were no longer required. It has paid nothing on account of the $20,000, although demand was made for $5,000 on July 15, 1905, and demand for the whole $20,000 on August 8, 1905. No sale was ever effected of any part of the mining property, nor of any of the capital stock referred to in the contract, and there has never been any transfer of any of said stock except one of 402 shares by McDonald to his wife. There is no finding of net profits of the mine aggregating $200,000, the amount necessary to entitle plaintiff to his full $20,000; the only findings that may be claimed to establish net profits being one which it will be assumed shows $41,284.74 net profit from August 1, 1902, to June 30, 1903, and one which it will be assumed shows $18,820.96 net profit from December 1, 1901, to July 31, 1902, and $22,443.62 net profit for the year 1900. The findings as to the amount of net product of the mine are not such as to force any conclusion that there was net profit amounting to $200,000 (including that expressly found), or any net profit approximating that amount, or, indeed, any net profit exceeding the aggregate amount of net profits expressly found. There was no allegation or finding to the effect that there had been any lack of diligence on the part of the corporation either in the matter of the proposed sale of the mining property, or in the operation of the mine; the latter having continued almost constantly from the date of the execution of the contract to the time of the commencement of this action. The conclusion of present liability on the part of the corporation for the full amount of $20,000 named in the contract is apparently based entirely on the finding "that by reason of the premises the defendant corporation, Keystone Consolidated Mining Company, had unreasonably delayed the payment of the amount due and owing under said contract dated March 1, 1901, prior to the 8th day of August, 1905, and prior to the commencement of this action." The only preceding statements in the findings that may be claimed to be pertinent to this are the following: The products of said mines each month have been gold bullion and gold bearing sulphurets. Ever since April 1, 1903, the monthly product has been shipped to McDonald each month or to banks named by him, and the corporation has been paid each month the money for which said bullion and sulphurets were sold. Ever since April 7, 1903, McDonald, who owned practically all the stock of the defendant corporation, has personally supervised the purchase of every article used in the business, and has personally supervised and been cognizant of the payment of every cent of expenditure, and has usually received duplicate vouchers of every dollar paid out; one being kept at the San Francisco office and one sent to the bookkeeper at the mines. The receipts, bills, pay rolls, and vouchers kept in the San Francisco office were destroyed by the fire of April 18, 1906. Prior to April 18, 1906, the accounts of said mines and the net profits of said mines subsequent to April, 1900, could be ascertained only from the examination of the original vouchers, bills, receipts, and pay rolls aforesaid, consisting of many thousand documents. McDonald stated to plaintiff prior to the commencement of this action that he had not the information whereby to ascertain what profits had been made by the operation of said mines since August 1, 1902, and also that no profits had been made during such period. It was further found, but such finding is attacked as being insufficiently sustained by evidence, that neither of such statements was true. It was further concluded by the trial court in a finding attacked by appellant as follows: The receipts of products realized monthly from the mines were evidenced originally by mint receipts and checks in payment for sales of sulphurets, and the expenditures were evidenced originally by bills, receipts, vouchers, and pay rolls, and, "in so far as these original transactions were entered in books of account," they were entered in four different sets of books, viz., in two different sets of books kept at defendant's office in San Francisco, one set in the name and for the use of defendant corporation, entries in which appear to have ceased about April, 1900, the other in the name and for the use of McDonald, which appears to have been kept up to the date of the commencement of this action; and in two different sets of books at Amador City, one of the defendant corporation, entries in which appear to have ceased or to have been neglected for two years prior to the commencement of this action, and the other of the Keystone Supply Company, a company organized by McDonald, and by which he transacted a general merchandise business at Amador City, and bought goods for and sold goods to defendant corporation. The entries in these books appear to have been kept up to the commencement of the action. The two last-named sets of books and the vouchers and papers constituting original entries and evidence appear to be in existence.

[1] We are unable to see in these facts any warrant for the conclusion that defendant had unreasonably delayed the payment of the amount specified in said contract, if, by a proper construction of its terms, such amount was to be paid by it solely out of the proceeds of the sale of the mining property, or out of the net profits of the mines. No failure by defendant, either willful or negligent, in the matter of the proposed sale or working of the mine by which proceeds or profits might be obtained from which the amount could be paid, being alleged or found, decisions to the effect that where the agreement is to pay only out of the net proceeds of the products of certain land or a certain mine, and the debtor then transfers such land or mine without working the same, and thus voluntarily puts it out of his power to get any product, or retaining it fails and refuses to work the mine, he breaks his contract and is immediately liable for the indebtedness (see Poirier v. Gravel, 88 Cal. 79, 25 Pac. 962; Wolf v. Marsh, 54 Cal. 228; Love v. Mabury, 59 Cal. 484), are therefore not at all in point. Nor does it appear from the findings, or, so far as we can see, from the evidence, that the mine is not being worked at some profit, or that from any cause it has become impossible to ascertain whether the monthly net profits of said mine between August 1, 1902, and the commencement of the action amounted to as much as $200,000. Indeed, we are not at all satisfied that the evidence was not of such a nature that it would have sufficiently supported a conclusion by the trial court that such an amount of net profit had, in fact, been obtained. But it is not necessary to determine this, as no such conclusion is contained in the findings. So far as appears from the findings, defendant corporation has acted with due diligence and care in the matter of the working of the mine, has not as yet derived therefrom the amount of $200,000, as net profit or any net profit approximating that amount, is still working the mine at a profit, and has done nothing making it impossible to ascertain approximately the amount of net profit thus far obtained, and it is not impossible, as matter of fact, to now ascertain approximately the amount of net profit. We repeat that, under such circumstances, we can see no warrant for holding that defendant has unreasonably delayed the payment of the full $20,000, if it is apparent that it was the intent and purpose of the parties that the amount should be paid only from the net profits in the event that there was no sale of the mine prior to August 1, 1902. As said by learned counsel for respondent, "it is substantially upon the basis of the interpretation of the provisions of this contract that the conclusions of the court must be reached."

In considering the question of the intent of the parties to the contract, certain facts shown by the evidence may properly be stated. Plaintiff was an attorney at law, and had been rendering services to appellant as attorney and in other capacities, ever since the year 1892, and was well acquainted with the mining property. He had also been rendering services to McDonald, and, as is recited in the contract, the relations of all the parties were "friendly and confidential." He had constantly been receiving pay on account of his services, but claimed that there was justly and fairly due him a large balance for his services, including a large sum as a fair and equitable reward or bonus because of the alleged discovery by him of a valuable ore deposit in the mine, which would increase very materially the value of the mine and the amount of profit that would thereafter be derived therefrom. His claims were entirely unliquidated in nature. His good faith in the matter of representations as to the value of the mine by reason of the existence of these ore deposits and the probability of great profit therefrom is clearly apparent from the evidence. Shortly before March, 1901, he strongly insisted upon some adjustment of his claims, with the result that, after much consideration by both plaintiff and McDonald, the agreement in suit was executed on March 1, 1901. This agreement was prepared by plaintiff, and was the third draft of a proposed agreement, the others also having been prepared by him. Of the amount of $20,000 thereby stipulated as due plaintiff, McDonald substantially testified that $10,000 was allowed plaintiff as a sort of reward on account of his alleged discovery of certain ore deposits in the mine, and we do not find that this testimony was in any way denied.

[2] Of course, it cannot be successfully disputed that a party to a contract may absolutely limit his right to receive a sum of money to be paid him thereunder to money derived by the other party from a certain source, as in this case it is claimed it is so limited to 10 per cent. of the net profits of the mine, and that in such a case, where the other party continues diligently to endeavor to derive such money from the specified source, he can recover only as it is so derived. In other words, the right to the money in such a case is by the contract conditioned on the other party's obtaining it from the specified source. And the question here simply is whether it was so intended to limit plaintiff's right by the agreement before us.

[3] Taking the agreement as a whole, such would appear to be the meaning and intent of its provisions. The acknowledgment of the indebtedness cannot be taken by itself, detached from all other provisions of the agreement, as showing an absolute acknowledgment of so much money due plaintiff in any event. It must be read in connection with all the other provisions of the contract, and so read it shows no more than an intention on the part of the parties to settle all alleged claims and equities of plaintiff by an undertaking on the part of defendant to pay plaintiff $20,000 solely out of the proceeds of a sale of such mining property if a sale was made prior to August 1, 1902, and, if no such sale was made, then solely out of the monthly proceeds of the mine, not to exceed 10 per cent. of the net profits thereof. The agreement on its face clearly shows that it was the intention of the parties that nothing should be due and payable to plaintiff on account of said $20,000 until August 1, 1902, in the event that no sale was effected prior to that time, and it appears to just as clearly indicate the intent that after that nothing in excess of 10 per cent. of the net profits should be due and payable on account thereof. The circumstances we have referred to, even if we exclude from consideration the fact that the agreement was drawn by plaintiff, make it manifest that it is the proper construction of what the parties have said in their writing in this regard, if there be any ambiguity in the language used therein, which we do not concede. And it may be added that this appears to have been the practical construction of the agreement by all parties up to July, 1905.

Plaintiff would practically have us substitute for the provisions contained in this agreement as to the payment of the $20,000 a stipulation that the same shall in any event be payable within a reasonable time, relying on such statements as the following, to be found in Noland v. Bull, 24 Or. 483, 33 Pac. 985: "Where there is a present debt then due, constituting the basis of an agreement which merely postpones the time of its payment to an uncertain future date, when a certain specified transaction shall be accomplished, the agreement is to pay within a reasonable time, whether such transaction is accomplished or not." Similar in principle are such cases as Busby v. Century Gold Mining Co., 27 Utah, 231, 75 Pac. 727, and our own case of Williston v. Perkins, 51 Cal. 554, in which laborers engaged in constructing a schooner were given, for the amounts due them for wages, certificates stating the amount due and that the party named therein was entitled to receive such amount "when the * * * schooner now in course of construction is sold." It was held that the defendants were entitled to only a reasonable time in which to finish and sell the schooner, and that, such time having elapsed, the plaintiff could maintain the action. We have no disposition to question the correctness of such decisions, many of which may doubtless be found. The agreement before us was not, as we look at it, of the nature of the kind of agreement referred to by such cases. It was an agreement of settlement of certain alleged claims and equities upon certain terms and conditions, one of which conditions was that the amount agreed upon should be paid only in the event that moneys for such payment should become available from certain specified sources. This being the agreement, as long as there is no default on the part of defendant in the matter of endeavoring to obtain the fund from which alone such payment is to be made, plaintiff is bound by the terms of the contract as to the event upon which he is to receive payment thereunder. The case of Earle v. Sunnyside Land Co., 150 Cal. 214, 88 Pac. 920, specially relied on by plaintiff, does not assist him. While the contract there called for payment of a valid indebtedness only from the proceeds of the sale by a land company of certain lots, the land company expressly agreed to use reasonable diligence in placing its lands upon the market and making such sales, and the trial court found that it had failed to use such diligence. It was simply held that, while violating this covenant on its part, the company could not stand upon the connected clause providing that no payments were to be made except out of the sale, and that by reason of the failure to observe this covenant it was liable upon the obligation. As we have indicated in this opinion, even in the absence of an express provision to use reasonable diligence to obtain the money by means of which the payment is to be made, such a provision may be implied, and failure to observe it may result in entitling the other party to recover, independent of the condition, as is shown by cases discussed in the opinion in the case last cited. But, as already shown, we have no showing or finding of any such failure in the case at bar.

It follows from what we have said that the findings do not support the judgment, by reason of their failure to show that there have been net profits of the mine aggregating $200,000, or any sum approximating that amount, or other facts warranting the judgment in the absence of such net profits.

For the purposes of a new trial, it is proper to say that we have considered the other points made by appellant, and are of the opinion that none of them is well based. We can see no reason for doubting that Mr. McDonald was fully authorized to make this agreement for and on behalf of defendant corporation; that the agreement was executed and delivered by the corporation; that it was based upon a valuable consideration; and that its execution was not induced by any fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

163 Cal. 710

HOME REAL ESTATE CO. et al. v. LOS ANGELES PAC. CO. et al.
(L. A. 2,715.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1912.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 18, 1912.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 82*)—RIGHT OF WAY—ABANDONMENT—EVIDENCE.

In ejectment by the owners of the fee of a railroad right of way to recover possession of the easement given, evidence held to show a cessation of operation of the road with an intent to permanently abandon the right of way for the purposes of a railroad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-219; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 82*)—RIGHT OF WAY—ABANDONMENT—NONUSER—EVIDENCE.

While nonuser, not accompanied by an intent to abandon, will not divest a railroad company of its easement in land for a right of way, the intention with which the use was abandoned is one of fact, to be determined from the party's conduct and the circumstances, and a long continued nonuser is some evidence of intent to abandon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-219; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings based on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 82*)—PARTIES—WHO MAY SUE—USE OF EASEMENT FOR PUBLIC PURPOSE.

While a private individual may not maintain ejectment against a corporation which has entered upon his land, where the effect of a recovery would be to stop a public service which has grown up in consequence of his acquiescence, he may maintain the action where the use for a public service has been abandoned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-219; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 82*)—RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY—NECESSARY PARTIES.

In ejectment by the owners of the fee of an abandoned railroad right of way, owners of a lumber yard on the line and others who may derive benefit from the operation of the road, but who have no interest in the land or right to its possession, are not necessary parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-219; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Ejectment by the Home Real Estate Company and others against the Los Angeles Pacific Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, the Los Angeles Pacific Company appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. McKinley and Gurney B. Newlin, both of Los Angeles (Roy V. Reppy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Bernard Potter and W. H. Fuller, both of Los Angeles, for respondents. Robert C. Fairall, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to recover possession of a strip of land 30 feet in width, located in the county of Los Angeles. That plaintiffs are the beneficial owners of a fee in the property is not disputed. The claim of the appellant the Los Angeles Pacific Company is that it holds and is entitled to retain possession of the strip as a right of way for railroad purposes.

It appears that on March 9, 1887, a number of persons (including Emanuel Peltier, the then owner of the premises, and the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs), as parties of the first part, entered into an agreement with James McLaughlin, appellant's predecessor, as party of the second part. The agreement recites that McLaughlin is the owner of a steam dummy railroad line running from a point in the city of Los Angeles, and that the other parties desire to have the line extended westerly beyond the city limits to the territory in which their lands are located. The parties of the first part, besides agreeing to make certain payments and conveyances to McLaughlin by way of subsidy, agree that McLaughlin "shall have the right to locate the route of his road as hereinafter stated, along, through, over and upon the lands of the parties of the first part," and that upon such locating they will convey to him a right of way for said railroad not exceeding 30 feet in width. McLaughlin agrees that he will "extend, construct, operate and maintain his steam dummy line of railroad from the terminus of his present franchise at the westerly corporate boundary of the city of Los Angeles," over a described route to and through the lands of Peltier and others. It is alleged in the complaint that McLaughlin constructed the extension about January 1, 1888, and operated his steam dummy line thereover for about five years. Thereafter, it is alleged, he ceased operating or running cars over the railroad "and abandoned the said road and the operation thereof." In 1905 the Los Angeles Pacific Company, claiming to have succeeded to McLaughlin's rights, constructed a roadbed over the property in controversy, laid ties and rails thereon, erected poles, and threatens to operate by electricity street cars over said road. It is alleged that since the abandonment of the road by McLaughlin there have been no acts done toward operating a street railway over the said road, except that cars have been run over plaintiffs' property occasionally for the purpose of hauling lumber or oil, but the same have not been run to accommodate the public or to carry passengers. By amendments to the complaint the plaintiffs sought to set up a further right of recovery, based upon the failure of McLaughlin and his successors, for a period exceeding six months, to operate the road as required by the statute of 1880 (Stats. 1880, p. 43), now incorporated into section 468 of the Civil Code. The defendant the Los Angeles Pacific Company denied the alleged abandonment as well as the failure to operate as required by the statute.

The court found in favor of plaintiffs upon both of the grounds asserted by them. Finding 12 declares that during the year 1897 McLaughlin and his successors in interest ceased to run cars over said line, but abandoned the said railroad and the operation thereof; that since the latter part of the year 1899 the track has been in many places covered with earth and debris, rendering it impossible to operate cars thereover; that since 1897 neither McLaughlin nor the appellant has run cars over plaintiffs' property, except intermittently during a portion of the time for the purpose of transporting oil to the town of Sherman (but not to or from the city of Los Angeles), and not for the purpose of accommodating the public. There are further findings supporting the allegations of the amendments to the complaint. Judgment went for plaintiffs, and the Los Angeles Pacific Company appeals from such judgment, as well as from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The foregoing findings are attacked as unsupported by the evidence.

In their briefs the parties devote much attention to the claim based on the terms of the statute of 1880. The appellant argues that that act does not provide for a self-executing forfeiture to be asserted in an action between private parties, and that, in any event, there can be no forfeiture until the Railroad Commission has decided, under the power conferred by section 3 of the act, the existence or nonexistence of the conditions excusing a failure to operate. These are interesting questions, but we find it unnecessary to pass upon them here, for the reason that, irrespective of the statute, the judgment is fully supported by finding 12, above referred to. The appellant concedes that, "where there has been an abandonment of a railroad right of way consisting of an easement only, the owner of the fee may maintain ejectment to recover possession." The court has found such abandonment, and the only question is whether this finding has the support of adequate evidence.

[1] We do not doubt that it has such support. Numerous witnesses testified that the active operation of the road stopped about 1897, and that it was never thereafter run over that portion of the track connecting with the city of Los Angeles. The hauling of oil cars continued for only two or three years, and even then was intermittent. The later carrying of lumber was of like character. During all this time no passengers were carried, and there was evidence that, after the appellant installed its electric system, passengers were not taken upon its cars. At no time was any service maintained over the line in question between the lands of the parties to the agreement with McLaughlin and the city of Los Angeles. The finding that a part of the track had become covered with debris, so that it could not be used, was also based on sufficient testimony.

[2] It is no doubt true, as claimed by appellant, that mere nonuser, not accompanied by an intent to abandon, will not divest the right of the railroad company to the easement. 33 Cyc. 222; Roby v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 176, 36 N. E. 1053; Townsend v. M. C. R. Co., 101 Fed. 757, 42 C. C. A. 570. But in this class of cases as in others, the intention with which an act is done is a question of fact, to be determined by the trial court or jury from a consideration of the conduct of the party and the surrounding circumstances.

[3] Where the evidence is such that a finding either way might reasonably be made, the conclusion of the trial court must be upheld under the familiar rule protecting from review on appeal findings based on conflicting evidence. And, while nonuser alone does not extinguish the easement, a long-continued nonuser is some evidence of an intent to abandon. Louisville Trust Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 76 Fed. 296, 22 C. C. A. 334; Townsend v. Mich. C. R. Co., supra.

But here we have more than a mere nonuser. The agreement under which McLaughlin and his successors claimed shows, by its recitals, that the main purpose of the parties of the first part was to secure a rail connection with the city of Los Angeles. No conveyance of a right of way, as contemplated by the agreement, was ever made by the parties of the first part to McLaughlin. The appellant is not, therefore, the owner of an easement conveyed by deed, but must rest upon its right as one who went into possession of land for certain purposes under license from the owner. Such entry, together with the designed use of the land, is no doubt sufficient to confer a right which is not revocable at the mere will of the owner of the fee. So. Cal. Ry. Co. v. Slauson, 138 Cal. 342, 71 Pac. 352, 94 Am. St. Rep. 58. But the nature and extent of the right acquired must be measured by the terms of the license under which entry was made. In this case the license is embodied in the agreement between the landowners and McLaughlin. The finding of the court is that by the agreement McLaughlin was given the right and privilege to locate, construct, and operate a steam dummy railroad over the strip in controversy "for the purpose of carrying passengers over said road and across said thirty-foot strip to and from the city of Los Angeles, and otherwise to do a general railroad business over the same." The right of McLaughlin and his successors to do a "general railroad business" is, of course, to be read as meaning the railroad business of a common carrier; i. e., the carriage of passengers or freight for the public generally. The only business which was ever done after 1897—i. e., the carriage, intermittently, of oil and lumber—was not "for the purpose of accommodating the public," as the court finds. This finding is supported by the testimony of appellant's own witnesses, one of whom testified that the oil was being hauled to Sherman "for the Los Angeles Pacific Company itself"; another, that "the road was not operated for the purpose of accommodating the public or carrying passengers after 1900." As to this element of appellant's right, therefore, the record shows nonuse of the easement. But with respect to the other and the main purpose of the easement—that is, the transportation of passengers to and from Los Angeles—it shows much more. It shows that McLaughlin's successors permitted a part of the track between plaintiffs' lands and the city to get into such condition that operation over it was impossible. Furthermore, there is testimony that the line in question was paralleled by another line of the Los Angeles Pacific Company, and that the latter was used for transporting passengers to and from Los Angeles. The superintendent of appellant's lines testified that "after 1900, as there were no passengers to travel on it (the McLaughlin line), * * * we quit." We think this testimony, together with the other facts in evidence, fully warranted the trial court, in drawing the inference that the cessation of operation of the road had been accompanied with the intent to permanently abandon the use of the strip for the purpose of a railroad. By allowing a part of the track to become impassable, and constructing a parallel road over which it carried all traffic to and from Los Angeles, the Los Angeles Pacific Company furnished evidence sufficient to satisfy a trial court that it did not intend to again use the road for that traffic. And, as we have seen, there was no other use which was within the purposes for which the right of way had been acquired.

[4] The appellant makes the point that a private individual cannot maintain an action of ejectment against a corporation which has entered upon his land, where the effect of a recovery would be to stop a public service which has grown up in consequence of plaintiff's acquiescence in the entry and use. Gurnsey v. No. Cal. Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185. But the rule relied on has, obviously, no application here, where the findings are that the appellant has not been, and is not, using the line for a public service.

[5] We see no merit in the contention that the action cannot be maintained because the owners of the lumber yard mentioned in the testimony are not joined as parties. They, and others who may derive benefit from the existence of the railroad, are, it is claimed, entitled to be heard in opposition to any judgment which will prevent the operation of the road. We do not think the interest of such persons is so direct as to require them to be made parties. The sole matter presented for adjudication by the pleadings was the right, as between the plaintiffs and the appellant, to the possession of the strip of land in controversy. No interest in this land or right to its possession was asserted by the owners of the lumber yard or by any one other than the parties to the action. If the railroad company occupied such a relation to the public interest as to make it improper for the court to grant the remedy of ejectment, this objection could properly be, as it in fact was, raised by the company itself. But, as we have seen, the facts were not such as to support the objection. To say that every member of the public who may desire or require the service of a railroad company must be joined in an action of this character would virtually abrogate the rule that where a right of way has been given, ejectment may be maintained by the owner of the land upon abandonment of the easement.

In the view which we have taken, the other questions discussed by counsel are of no importance.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

163 Cal. 705

WEBSTER v. BOARD OF REGENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.
(S. F. 5,874.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 20, 1912. Rehearing Denied Oct. 18, 1912.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 417*)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—VALIDITY—MISNOMERS.

Where a notice of appeal correctly states that the appeal is taken by the "Regents of the University of California," as designated by St. 1867-68, p. 252, the appeal is not subject to dismissal because the board is named in the complaint and judgment as the "Board of Regents of the University of the State of California."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2140-2143; Dec. Dig. § 417.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 213*)—EXEMPTIONS—"PROPERTY BELONGING TO THE STATE."

A mortgage held by the Regents of the University of California is "property belonging to the state" within Const. art. 13, § 1, which exempts state property from taxation, and hence where land is mortgaged to the Regents and the mortgagor's interest is sold to the state at a tax sale, and a resale and deed is made by the state to an individual under Pol. Code, § 3897, the deed to such purchaser remains subject to such mortgage, though Const. art. 13, § 4, makes both the interests of mortgagors and mortgagees subject to a tax levy upon either interest; that provision not applying to public property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 353; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 183*)—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Constitutional and statutory provisions relating to taxation of property are to be understood as referring to private property, and as not including public property of the state, or any subordinate part of the state government.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 295; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by A. M. Webster against the Board of Regents of the University of California. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Warren Olney, Jr., and F. A. Cutler, both of San Francisco, for appellant. James H. Boyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeals presented were taken by the defendant from the judgment and from an order denying it a new trial.

[1] In the complaint and judgment the name of the defendant is stated to be "Board of Regents of the University of the State of California." The notices of appeal state that the appeals are taken by the defendant, and its true name is "Regents of the University of California." Respondent moves to dismiss the appeals because of this discrepancy, claiming that there is no appeal on behalf of the party named in the complaint and judgment as the defendant. There is no merit in the motion. The name as given in the complaint and judgment is a misnomer. The true name is that given in the notices of appeal. Stats. 1867-68, p. 252. The misnomer in this case is wholly immaterial.

[2] The only question necessary to decide is whether or not, where land is mortgaged to the Regents of the University of California, and a tax sale and conveyance of the mortgagor's interest is made to the state and a resale and deed thereupon is made by the state to an individual, under section 3897 of the Political Code, such sales and deeds operate upon the mortgage interest or lien of the mortgagee and vest title in the tax sale purchaser free from the mortgage lien. The sales all took place while the constitutional provision was in force declaring that for purposes of taxation the interest of the mortgagor, and that of the mortgagee in the land mortgaged should be distinct interests and separately taxable.

The mortgage to the Regents was executed on December 6, 1890, and was duly recorded. The tax sales to the state were made on July 3, 1897, for the taxes of 1896. The deeds from the tax collector to the state were made on July 7, 1902. The State Controller on March 20, 1905, directed the tax collector to sell the lands in pursuance of said sales and deeds. The tax collector thereupon, on April 18, 1905, sold said lands to the plaintiff and executed to him deeds therefor in due form. On August 31, 1899, the Regents of the University of California began an action in Alameda county, where said land is situated, to foreclose its said mortgage, making parties defendant thereto all persons interested in the land except itself and the state of California, and notice of the pendency of the action was duly filed on the same day. Process was duly served, or appearances duly entered, and on January 4, 1905, judgment of foreclosure of said mortgage and for the sale of said property was duly given. Said judgment was entered on January 19, 1905. Thereafter, on May 16, 1905, said lands were duly sold, in pursuance of said judgment, to the Regents of the University of California. No redemption having been made, a deed was duly executed to said purchaser on December 28, 1905. Upon these facts there can be no serious doubt of the proposition that the title is not in the plaintiff, but in the defendant, and that the finding to the contrary is without support in the evidence.

The Constitution declares that all property belonging to the state shall be exempt from taxation. Section 1, art. 13. A mortgage of land, executed to the Regents of the University of California, to secure money due said body for any purpose for which it was created, and the interest which it thereby, for the purposes of taxation, holds in the land, is the property of the state, within the meaning of this provision, and as such the said interest is exempt from taxation. Holister v. Sherman, 63 Cal. 38; People v. Board, 77 Cal. 137, 19 Pac. 257; Henne v. Los Angeles Co., 129 Cal. 298, 61 Pac. 1081. The mortgage interest belonging to the Regents being thus free from taxation, it necessarily follows that the lien of the tax assessments, they being made upon the interest of the mortgagor alone, did not extend to or include the interest vested in the state by virtue of the mortgage to the Regents. Hence the tax sales and deeds, made in pursuance of the assessments upon the mortgagor's interest, did not operate to transfer or convey the exempt interest of the state represented by the mortgage. Their effect was confined to the interest of the mortgagor. The result is that the plaintiff by his purchase and deeds from the tax collector, conceding that they were regular and valid in form, obtained only the right and title of the mortgagor in the land; that is, the right to pay off the mortgage at any time before the foreclosure sale and the right to redeem from said sale for six months after it was made, and thereupon to hold the land discharged therefrom. His title was subject to the mortgage and to said foreclosure judgment and not paramount to it. If this were not so, the constitutional provision exempting the mortgage interest of the Regents from taxation would be to that extent ineffectual. If the lien of the mortgagor's tax, and the power to sell the land for nonpayment thereof, extended to and covered the mortgage interest of the Regents, that interest would not be exempt. To give adequate effect to the Constitution and to protect the property of the state as it intends, the exemption must be complete and must exclude not only a direct tax thereon, but also any lien or charge thereon growing out of the tax upon the complementary interest of the mortgagor.

[3] We do not overlook the fact that section 4 of article 13 of the Constitution which makes the interest of the mortgagor and mortgagee distinct and separate for the purposes of taxation declares that a tax levied upon either interest shall be a lien upon both interests, or that it has been directly held that the payment by a mortgagee of the tax on his interest does not exempt it from sale for nonpayment of taxes on the interest of the mortgagor, and also that such tax assessed upon the interest of the mortgagor is paramount to the mortgage itself, although junior thereto in point of time. Cal. Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 50 Pac. 697. These two apparently conflicting provisions must be interpreted and applied so as to be in harmony with each other, if reasonably possible. They are to be construed in the same manner as similar provisions of this character have always been construed. The rule applicable thereto is thus expressed in People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 222: "The Constitution and laws upon the subject of taxing property are therefore to be understood as referring to private property and persons, and not including public property of the state, or any subordinate part of the state government." See, also, People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 456; Low v. Lewis, 46 Cal. 552; Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 360; Smith v. Santa Monica, 162 Cal. —, 121 Pac. 920. The general rule applied in all such cases is that statutes authorizing liens on or forced sales of property, generally, will not be held applicable to public property, unless the intention to make them so expressly or plainly appears. Mayrhofer v. Board, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 193, 75 Pac. 782, and cases there cited. It follows, therefore, that the said provision of section 4 of article 13 must be understood as referring wholly to the taxation of private property and to mortgages made to private persons and not to those belonging to the state. The rule that a tax lien is paramount and prior to the mortgage lien must for like reasons give way when the mortgage lien is exempt from taxation because the mortgage is the property of the state.

This conclusion is decisive of the case. The title is vested in the Regents of the University of California and not in the mortgagor. The deeds to the plaintiff conveyed only the interest of the mortgagor in the property, which interest has been extinguished by the foreclosure sale and the deed thereunder. The title is now in the Regents free from any claim of the plaintiff.

We do not find it necessary to notice the other points urged by the defendant in support of its appeals.

The findings are in favor of the plaintiff generally and the specific facts are not stated. Hence, we cannot direct a judgment, and a new trial is necessary.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

163 Cal. 701

PEACOCK v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND
FOR SOLANO COUNTY et al. (S. F.
6,186.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 19, 1912.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 57*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Writ of mandate lies to compel vacation of an order of the superior court wrongfully dismissing an appeal from justice's court, and compelling restoration of the appeal for trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 114, 120; Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 160*)—APPEAL—NOTICE—CONCLUSIVENESS OF RECITALS.

Recitals in a notice of appeal from a justice's judgment that the appeal is taken both upon questions of law and fact is not conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 579-591, 658; Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 184*)—JUDGMENT OF NONSUIT—POWER TO ENTER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 925, which declares justices' courts to be courts of limited jurisdiction, and under section S90, limiting the grounds for dismissing actions in such courts, a justice was not authorized to enter judgment of nonsuit for failure to prove material allegations of the complaint; and hence an appeal from a judgment of dismissal based on an order of nonsuit is not an appeal upon a question of law alone within the rule that, on appeal to the superior court on questions of law alone, the proper procedure is to allow a new trial for error or to affirm, in absence of error.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 715; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 171*)—ERRO-NEOUS JUDGMENT—EFFECT.

Error of a justice of the peace in entering a judgment of dismissal for supposed failure by plaintiff to prove the material allegations of his complaint, instead of giving defendant judgment on the merits, does not deprive plaintiff's right to appeal upon questions of both law and fact so as to have his cause tried de novo in the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 655–657; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

In Bank. Petition by W. S. Peacock against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Solano and another for writ of mandate to compel vacation of an order dismissing an appeal from a justice's court. Mandate issued.

Byron Ball, of San Francisco, for petitioner. W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. [1] An action in a justice's court was brought and prosecuted by W. S. Peacock, petitioner herein, against Henry Goosen, defendant. Trial was had, oral and documentary evidence was introduced on behalf of the plaintiff, and, when plaintiff rested his case, the defense moved for a nonsuit upon the ground of his failure to prove the material allegations of his complaint. The justice granted the motion and dismissed the action. Peacock prosecuted in due form his appeal to the superior court from the judgment so rendered; his notice of appeal declaring that the appeal was taken on questions of both law and fact. In the superior court a motion to dismiss this appeal was made and granted. The grounds of the motion were that the appeal from a judgment of dismissal presents a question of law alone, and that, when a question of law alone is presented by an appeal from a justice's to the superior court, a statement is required, and that no such statement accompanied the appeal in this case. Code Civ. Proc. § 976. Thereupon petitioner has applied to this court for mandate seeking a vacation of the order of dismissal given by the superior court and a restoration of his appeal from the justice's court to the calendar of the superior court for trial. Petitioner is within his rights in thus seeking mandate. Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 474, 114 Pac. 978; Edwards v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 712, 115 Pac. 649.

[2, 3] To this petition respondent answers that petitioner's declaration in his notice of appeal that it is taken both upon questions of law and fact is not conclusive. This is true, for the mere declaration in a petition cannot have the effect of varying the facts. Thus, if an appeal be taken to the superior court after judgment upon demurrer sustained, it would still be an appeal upon questions of law alone, even though the notice of appeal contained the declaration that it was taken on questions both of law and fact. Next, respondent contends that an appeal from a judgment of dismissal even when, as here, the judgment of dismissal is based upon an order on nonsuit, is an appeal upon a question of law alone. And, finally, it is declared that, when an appeal to the superior court is based on questions of law alone, the proper procedure is to remand the cause for trial in the justice's court if the justice has fallen into error upon a material question of law, or to affirm the judgment of the justice's court if the justice has not erred. Myrick v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 100, 8 Pac. 648; Maxson v. Superior Court, 124 Cal. 468, 57 Pac. 379.

The reasoning of respondent would have force if the justice were clothed with power and authority to render the judgment which he gave. The fundamental error in respondent's reasoning arises from the fact that the justice is not clothed with any such power. By the Code itself (Code Civ. Proc. § 925) justices' courts are declared to be courts of peculiar and limited jurisdiction, and only those provisions of the codes which are in their nature applicable to the organization, powers and course of proceedings in justices' courts, or which have been made applicable by special provisions, are so applicable. Turning briefly to the consideration of the powers of courts of record and of general jurisdiction, it is declared as to them (Code Civ. Proc. § 581) that "an action may be dismissed, or a judgment on nonsuit entered, in the following cases: (5) By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury." The corresponding section governing the procedure in justices' courts is found in section 890 of the same Code. That section authorizes a judgment of dismissal to be entered only in certain cases, denies by its silence the right of a justice to entertain a motion for a nonsuit, and omits entirely the provisions of subdivision 5 quoted above from section 581. The imperative conclusion to be drawn from a consideration of these two sections is that the Legislature as to justices' courts has limited the causes for which a judgment of dismissal may be entered by a justice, and that a failure by the plaintiff to establish his case by satisfactory evidence is not one of those causes. Further, that the Legislature has not intrusted to justices the right to pass upon and grant motions for nonsuit. The course of the justice is thus made plain. Where evidence has been introduced in a trial of a case before him and the plaintiff rests his case upon evidence which, to the mind of the justice, is not sufficient to entitle him to judgment, the result is that there has been a trial upon the merits, that the plaintiff has failed to establish his cause, and that judgment upon the merits should be rendered for the defendant. Such is the clear meaning of our law, and so it has been construed in 1 Cowdery's Justice Treatise, p. 664, § 1134.

[4] It follows from the foregoing that the justice erroneously entered a judgment of dismissal against plaintiff, when the sole judgment which he was authorized to render under the circumstances was a judgment for defendant upon the merits. But the erroneous form of the judgment which the justice actually rendered cannot deprive the plaintiff of his right to appeal upon questions both of law and fact (for under the circumstances and after a trial upon the merits questions of both law and fact are involved), and so to have his cause tried de novo in the superior court. Smith v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. App. 529, 84 Pac. 54, upon which respondent relies, was not brought under review before this court by any petition for rehearing. The basic error in the Smith Case is the same as has been here pointed out. It rests upon the unfounded assumption of the power of the justice to entertain a motion for a nonsuit, and to render a judgment of dismissal under the provisions of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, as has been pointed out, the power of the justice's court in the matter of dismissal is circumscribed by and confined to the provisions of section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Let mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

PER CURIAM. The following words are hereby added to the opinion heretofore filed in the above entitled case: "And petitioner will recover his costs upon this application, to be taxed in accordance with law."

163 Cal. 681

ELIZALDE v. MURPHY et al. (L. A. 3,020.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 13, 1912.)

On Rehearing, Oct. 12, 1912.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 101*)—ADMINISTRATORS—DUTY TO ACCOUNT—LIMITATIONS.

An administrator's duty to account being a continuing one, a plea of limitations is not open to the personal representative of a deceased administrator, or to the sureties on his official bond in an action for an accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 494-510; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§§ 473, 474*)—ACCOUNTING—RIGHT TO RELIEVE—FRAUD—MALVERSATION—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

The right of the beneficiary of a decedent's estate to an accounting by the personal representative does not rest upon, and is not affected by, allegations of fraud or malversation, and hence allegations in the bill for an accounting that the administrator wrongfully commingled the funds of the estate with his own funds, and wrongfully settled claims by taking notes of the debtor running to himself individually, etc., did not change the bill into an action for tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2041-2060; Dec. Dig. §§ 473, 474.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§§ 473, 474*)—BILL FOR ACCOUNTING—REQUISITES.

Where a bill against the personal representatives of a deceased administrator for an accounting alleged facts showing a fiduciary relation existing between the parties, it was not essential that it should also contain allegations of fraud or malversation on the part of the administrator; such facts being provable without allegation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2041-2060; Dec. Dig. §§ 473, 474.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 484*)—ACCOUNTING—ACTION ON BOND.

In an action against the personal representatives of an administrator and his bondsman, personal loans or advances made by the administrator to one of the beneficiaries of the estate were chargeable only against the distributive share of the estate found due to such beneficiary, and were not available as a set-off to any sum found due the estate by such administrator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 763, 2067; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 527*)—BONDS—RECITALS—CONCLUSIVENESS ON SURETY.

A recital in an administrator's bond that it was given pursuant to an order of court at a specified date is conclusive on the surety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2355-2374; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 531*)—ACTION ON BOND—DERELICTIONS—DUTY TO NOTIFY SURETY.

Where alleged derelictions of an administrator were matters of record in the court at the time he was ordered to give an additional bond on which defendant M. was surety, and the beneficiaries of the estate had nothing to do with the procurement of M. as surety, he was not relieved from liability for a devastavit because of alleged failure on the part of beneficiaries to notify him promptly of their suspicions or belief in the administrator's misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2406-2430; Dec. Dig. § 531.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 529*)—BONDS—SCOPE OF LIABILITY.

An administrator's bond in general terms, conditioned on the faithful performance by the administrator of the duties of his trust, was not limited to acts done after the execution of the bond, but covered breaches of trust of the administrator committed prior as well as subsequent to the bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2395-2403; Dec. Dig. § 529.*]

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 227*)—CLAIMS—SUFFICIENCY.

Where decedent was surety on an administrator's bond which had been breached, a claim filed against decedent's estate, alleging that decedent was indebted to cash due the estate secured by the bond by reason of decedent's becoming surety on the bond of the administrator, stating the liability at a specified sum and containing a separate charge for interest, was sufficient, though the exact amount of the claim could not be known until the termination of a pending suit for an accounting.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 811-818, 842; Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Robert M. Clarke, Judge.

Action by Elisa P. Elizalde, as administratrix of the estate of Marcos A. Elizalde, against P. W. Murphy and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. Shipsey and S. V. Wright, both of San Luis Obispo, for appellants. B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, and Louis Lamy, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Ernest Graves during his lifetime was the administrator of the estate of Marcos A. Elizalde, whose sole heirs at law were his widow, Victoria C., and his daughter, Elisa P. In July, 1898, the account of Graves as administrator was settled and approved. It showed in his possession funds of the estate to the amount of $4,633.50 above all credits allowed to him. Graves died July 15, 1900. The daughter, Elisa P. Elizalde, was appointed administratrix of her father's estate, and on April 8, 1901, this action to compel an accounting was instituted against the sureties upon the administrator's bonds given by Ernest Graves. Subsequently Lucinda Graves, as administratrix of the estate of Ernest Graves, was brought in as an additional defendant. Growing out of different phases and branches of the controversy, three appeals have already been taken. They will be found reported in 146 Cal. 168, 79 Pac. 866, 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 Pac. 245, and 11 Cal. App. 32, 103 Pac. 904. This appeal is taken by the defendants Marre and McAllister, sureties upon the bond of Ernest Graves, deceased, as administrator, from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

A reference to the opinion in 11 Cal. App. 32, 103 Pac. 904, will disclose that there came into the hands of Graves, as administrator, what is known as the Dargie note; that Graves did not collect this note, but did take from Dargie and his wife new notes executed to him, Graves, personally as payee. There was before the appellate court in that case the consideration of the question whether the conduct of Graves amounted to an appropriation or conversion of the original note, and, if it did, then the question of the allowance of interest; that court in this connection saying: "Upon the new trial there should be a finding of fact on the issue of the appropriation or conversion of the original note by Graves, as this is a mixed question of law and fact; so, also, in order that the court may determine whether or not the principal sum should bear interest, it is important that the trial court also make a finding of the good or bad faith of Graves in taking the notes in his own name, the latter finding being necessary to the determination of the right of the estate to interest, but having no application to the question of the conversion of the principal sum. Estate of Cousins, 111 Cal. 441, 44 Pac. 182; Matter of Bane, 120 Cal. 536, 52 Pac. 853, 65 Am. St. Rep. 197."

Before proceeding with the hearing of the questions thus presented, the trial court permitted plaintiff to file certain amendments to her complaint, charging that Ernest Graves, while administrator, mingled the balance of account mentioned in the original complaint and $420 subsequently collected by him as rent on part of the estate with his own funds so as to constitute himself in appearance the sole and absolute owner thereof, and used the same for his own personal benefit. A further amendment was permitted charging upon the conduct of Graves in taking notes of the Dargies to himself personally in substitution for the note due to the estate, and with commencing suit in his own name to collect the moneys due upon these notes, the continuance of this suit after Graves' death by Lucinda Graves, administratrix of his estate, and the compromise of this suit for the sum of $150, which sum was paid to Lucinda Graves as administratrix. It is further charged that Graves died insolvent, and it is finally charged that plaintiff did not discover the willful and wrongful commingling of the funds of the estate with the administrator's own funds until a very short time before the filing of the amendment. The amendment was filed March 21, 1910.

[1] Appellants complain that the court did not specifically find upon their plea of the statute of limitations; their plea being that "the recovery of said balance of account and said $420 of rent referred to in said twentieth paragraph of said complaint as amended and each and every item thereof is barred by the provisions of sections 337, 338 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure." But, as in an action such as this such a plea is not open to the defendants, a finding was unnecessary. The action was simply an action for an accounting—an action to compel the personal representative of a trustee after his death, and the sureties upon his bond as such trustee, to give an account of the property held by the trustee, and of his administration of the trust, to have that account audited and settled by the court and a balance struck. Osment v. McElrath, 68 Cal. 466, 9 Pac. 731, 58 Am. Rep. 17. The duty of the administrator to account was a continuing duty and does not become barred. Estate of Sander- son, 74 Cal. 199, 15 Pac. 753; Cook v. Ceas, 147 Cal. 614, 82 Pac. 370.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] The right of the beneficiaries to seek an accounting does not rest upon, and is in no way dependent upon, any allegations of fraud or malversation. When those allegations are contained in a bill for an accounting, they do not change the bill into an action for tort. State v. Chadwick, 10 Or. 423; Segelken v. Meyer, 94 N. Y. 473. So in this case the amendments which plaintiff was permitted to file not only did not change the action but did not broaden its scope. It would have been permissible for plaintiff, without amendments, to prove everything which she charged as to the nature of the dealings of the administrator with the estate's property without specific allegations bearing thereon. [3] And, for the reason already indicated, that the action was for an accounting by a trustee, and that the realm of inquiry in such action is limited only by the meaning of the word itself, no plea of the statute of limitations could avail the defendants. "A bill for an account must show by specific allegations that there was a fiduciary relation between the parties or that the account is so complicated that it cannot be taken in an action at law. But no allegation beyond those which establish the fiduciary relation * * * is necessary." 1 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 98. In the case of a trustee only an unequivocal repudiation of the trust by him, with knowledge of this brought home to the beneficiaries of the trust, could set the statute of limitations in favor of the trustee in motion. Fox v. Tay, 89 Cal. 339, 24 Pac. 855, 26 Pac. 897, 23 Am. St. Rep. 474; Hovey v. Bradbury, 112 Cal. 620, 44 Pac. 1077.

For the same reason, that portion of the finding to the effect that plaintiff did not until December, 1909, discover that Graves as administrator had commingled the estate's funds with his own, even if unsupported, has no bearing upon the controversy; for the essential fact to be found by the court upon the question of allowing or withholding interest and compounding the same was whether or not Graves had so commingled the funds, and the evidence upon this point abundantly establishes that he did. The discovery by the present administratrix, then but an heir, of such commingling, could not, we say, have any bearing upon this litigation, for the reason that, if she knew of such conversion, she could not have instituted against Graves as administrator an action therefor. Her sole right under the circumstances would have been to call the trustee to an account, as here she has done. After the judgment in accounting in her favor, then for the first time arises the right to take appropriate proceedings against the administrator to enforce such judgment. However, it may be added that while the testimony does disclose that the Elizalde heirs—mother and daughter—during the administration of Graves did suspect or think that he was improperly using the moneys of the estate, they had no actual knowledge of such misuse or malversation, and still less could they be charged with holding the conviction that when his account as administrator was settled he would not make good whatever sum was found due to the estate.

Defendants pleaded a release to the administrator, Graves, executed by the Elizalde heirs. The court pronounced this release a forgery. It is unnecessary to discuss the conflicting evidence upon this question, but suffice it to say in pointing out that the finding is sustained by the evidence that not only do the two heirs positively deny their signatures to the release and the execution of it by them, but upon a previous trial the court found this release to be a forgery, and the defendants acquiesced in the finding to the extent that no appeal was taken by them from the judgment which followed.

Numerous other objections are presented by appellants. For the most part, they are based upon the position which appellants take that because of the amendments to the bill charging misappropriations and conversions and commingling of the funds of the estate the cause of action has been changed from the equitable action for an accounting to a legal action in tort. This position, as we have already said, is untenable. To illustrate without elaboration, it is contended that appellants were entitled to a jury trial because the action was one at law. It is contended that the court erred in overruling appellants' demurrers because a cause of action for an accounting was joined with a legal action for conversion. It is contended that the statute of limitations had run in favor of appellants as to certain acts of conversion found by the court. These objections, one and all, have been sufficiently answered by what has previously been said. Certain other objections, even if containing merit, are of no essential value to appellants. Thus the court found that Dargie was solvent. His solvency or insolvency had no bearing upon the conduct of the administrator in his dealings with the Dargie matter, the taking of new notes in his own name for the old, the collection of one of these notes at maturity, and his failure to account to the estate for the proceeds of the collected note, and for the other notes which he took in his own name personally as payee.

[4] Again, it is said that the finding to the effect that "Ernest Graves has not as administrator advanced to Victoria Elizalde $3,000 or any sum or anything at all" is wholly unsupported. The finding, it is to be borne in mind, is that Graves did not as administrator make any such advances. The evidence does, in fact, show that Graves did pay over to Mrs. Elizalde certain sums of money. All of these payments but three were made before Mr. Graves became administrator, and after he became administrator he did not claim in his statement of account that as administrator he had advanced Mrs. Elizalde anything. Therefore the court was justified in its finding, for the advancements were in the nature of personal loans, chargeable only against the distributive portion of the estate found to be due to Mrs. Elizalde. It is the law of the case that these payments or advances have no place in this action as a set-off to any sum found due to the estate by Graves as administrator. Elizalde v. Murphy, 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 Pac. 245.

Certain propositions are advanced upon behalf of appellant Marre growing out of the following facts: Graves as administrator had at different times given two bonds in the sum of $20,000 each. Subsequently he gave a third bond for $10,000, upon which bond one of the sureties was Luigi Marre. Luigi Marre has since died, and this appeal is prosecuted by Gaspar Marre, administrator with the will annexed of his estate. The first proposition advanced is that the bond was not made in pursuance of any order of court, notwithstanding that the findings declare that it was, and that it is therefore void.

[5] The facts are that the order of the court requiring Mr. Graves to give the additional bond could not be produced. The bond itself, however, recites the order and gives its date. This is conclusive upon the surety. Tartar v. Hall, 3 Cal. 263; Coles v. Soulsby, 21 Cal. 47; Moore v. Earl, 91 Cal. 632, 27 Pac. 1087.

[6] Appellants next contend that because the contract of suretyship imports entire good faith and confidence between the parties to the whole transaction, and because the Elizalde heirs knew or suspected misconduct upon the part of the administrator, Marre is exonerated because he was not informed by them of their suspicions or belief. In this, however, appellants entirely misconceive the meaning of the law. The heirs of the Elizalde estate had nothing whatsoever to do with the procurement of Graves' sureties, did not even know Marre, and did not even know that he was to become a surety. Still further, at the time that Marre became such surety, the petition of the heirs asking for the removal of Graves as administrator for these derelictions of duty was on file and a matter of record. So, also, was the court's order settling the account which Graves himself had presented, and charging him with having in his possession funds of the estate to the amount of several thousand dollars, which settled account really forms the basis of this action. There is therefore nothing in this proposition.

[7] And, finally, the bond executed by Marre does not in terms limit his liability to the acts of the administrator after the execution of the instrument. The bond is general in terms, conditioned upon the faithful performance by the administrator of the duties of his trust. It is settled beyond controversy that, under such circumstances, the surety upon the bond of an administrator becomes liable for the breaches of trust of the administrator committed prior to his becoming such surety, as well as for those committed subsequent thereto. Irwin v. Backus, 25 Cal. 223, 85 Am. Dec. 125; Powell v. Power, 48 Cal. 234; Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; Lacoste v. Splivalo, 64 Cal. 35, 30 Pac. 571; Evans v. Gerken, 105 Cal. 313, 38 Pac. 725; Treweek v. Howard, 105 Cal. 434, 39 Pac. 20.

[8] The final contention on behalf of appellant Marre is that no sufficient claim was presented against the Marre estate. The form of the claim was as follows:

To cash due said estate of Marcos Elizalde, deceased, by reason of said Luigi Marre becoming surety on the bond of Ernest Graves as administrator of the estate of said Marcos A. Elizalde, deceased, the sum of.....	$6163 65
Interest on said sum from Aug. 1, 1900, at 7 per cent. per annum.....	1063 90

It is, of course, apparent that the exact amount due from the estate of Marre could not be stated until this accounting was had. The purpose of presenting a claim is to advise the party against whom the claim is presented of its nature. The Code nowhere defines the precise form of such a claim. Sections 1493, 1497, 1502, Code Civ. Proc. In Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 Pac. 911, it is said: "A claim against an estate is not required to state the facts with all the preciseness and detail required in a complaint, and its sufficiency is not to be tested by the rules of pleading." Assuming that the presentation of a claim against the estate of Marre was necessary under the circumstances here shown, we are clear that the claim which was in fact presented was sufficient to comply with the law, to convey notice of the nature of the claim, of the circumstances out of which it grew and its approximate amount, which manifestly was all that could be stated.

Certain errors in the admission and rejection of evidence are presented for consideration. It would unduly and unnecessarily extend this opinion to notice them. They have been examined and found without merit.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause, not for the reason that I differ with the court upon any of the questions discussed in their opinion, but because I think at least one of the questions presented by the record and in the briefs of counsel, but not discussed in the opinion, deserves further consideration.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

19 Cal. App. 500

Ex parte POTTER. (Cr. 249). (District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 19, 1912.) Application of E. S. Potter for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded. Parker & Moote, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. John D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., Guy Eddie, City Prosecutor, Frank W. Stafford, Asst. City Prosecutor, and L. H. Roseberry, Special Prosecutor, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The Justices of this court being unable to agree upon a decision of the questions involved in this proceeding, it follows that the petitioner must be remanded to the custody of the chief of police of Los Angeles city; and it is so ordered.

Ex parte POTTER. (Cr. 250.) (District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 19, 1912.) Application for habeas corpus by E. S. Potter. Petitioner remanded. Parker & Moote, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. John D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., Guy Eddie, City Prosecutor, Frank W. Stafford, Asst. City Prosecutor, and L. H. Roseberry, Special Prosecutor, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The Justices of this court being unable to agree upon a decision of the questions involved in this proceeding, it follows that the petitioner must be remanded to the custody of the chief of police of Los Angeles city; and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

3 1786 10046 9946

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

